POPE PIUS X IS DEAD

Pontiff Passed Away at 1.20 Rome Time—A Simple Cold developed into Bronchial Trou Which he was Unable to Successfully Combat — Europe War Caused Depression Which Aggravated Illness

Rome, Aug. 20.—Pope Pius X. at 1.20 o'clock this (Thursday) morning. He had been ill for several but alarming symptoms did not develop until Wednesday morning.

Throughout the day Doctors Mafaiava and Amici devoted their most energies to stimulating patient and keeping him alive. Cardinals were notified of the Pope's grave condition, and some of who entered the sick room described the impressive and heart-rending scenes, especially when the Pope rousing himself from time to time. Once he said: "In many times the Pope by a word might have stayed the slaughter, but now he is impotent."

Prayers were said by thousands and the bells of the churches sounded when the Sacrament was expounded on all the altars. When the Cardinal learned of the Pope's condition it was the deepest concern. King of Emmanuel personally informed Queen Helena, and the news was communicated to the Queen-mother.

Extreme unction was administered by Mgr. Zampini, Sacristan to Holiness, amid a most touching scene. The sisters of the Pope and his nephews were overcome with grief. Cardinal Merry del Val knelt by the side of his bed, where other Cardinals joined him, the members of the household intoning prayer.

PATHETIC CLOSING SCENES

The dying Pope, in a moment of lucidity, said: "Now I begin to think the end is approaching, that the Almighty in his inexhaustible goodness wishes to spare me the horrors Europe is undergoing."

Wednesday was one of the most anxious days in the history of Papacy. The whole world knew that the Pope was indisposed, but it was supposed that he was suffering from his usual ailment, the gout. Up to noon even the members of the household were unaware of the seriousness of the developments. Almost with warning came the word that the Pontiff was at death's door.

All day his agony continued. Times he revived and was able to utter a few words, but hope of saving was finally abandoned. Several times throughout the city and at the Apostolic Palace the rumor spread that the Pope had passed, only to be denied later.

The Pope's last illness began most coincidentally with the great war in Europe. Those close to him believe that grief over the situation brought on the final crisis and

HAVE YOU HELPED THE HOSPITALSHIP FUND?

Are you going to deny yourself something—a few ribbons and laces, a few ice cream sodas, a few boxes of chocolates—a few boxes of cigars, if you are a man, to help swell the fund?

Do you realize that the fund is not for the purpose of making war, but to give aid to the wounded and suffering who are upholding the honor of the Empire?

Some mothers and fathers are giving their sons. Some women are brave y giving their husbands, though it tears their very heart strings.

Are you doing anything?

How much are you giving towards the humane work of the hospitalship? If only a little silver, you will not miss it?

Do not be niggardly. If you are a loyal Canadian now is your time to show it, and support the various organizations collecting for the fund.

The person just now who refuses to give any help to his or her country, and who scoffs at those working hard and loyally, is about the smallest personality on the face of the earth! With acknowledgements to The Toronto Daily News.

Ottawa, Aug. 19.—Canada speaks with one voice. The voice of a united Parliament is the voice of a united people. "As to our duty, all are agreed. We stand shoulder to shoulder with the Mother Country. With firm hearts we abide the issue," said Sir Robert Borden, in concluding the debate on the address in reply to the speech from the Throne in Parliament to-day. "Our answer is, 'Ready, aye Ready!' Our appeal is not to the God of battles, but to the God of justice and mercy. We have had our differences and disagreements, but here and now I give the assurance that in what has been done and in what remains to be done, we shall take no exception and offer no criticism so long as there is danger at the front. We propose to let the friends and the foes of Britain know that a united Canada stands with the Mother Country, conscious and proud that she wages war not for selfish purposes, but with one mind and one heart to maintain untarnished the honor and dignity of her name, and to save civilization from the unbridled lust of conquest and power," declared Sir Wilfrid Laurier. Both leaders, rising above all considerations of party politics, struck a high and inspiring note in memorable and historic utterances before crowded galleries, a full attendance of members, and with the consciousness of the gravity and import of their utterances.

ABIDE THE EVENT WITH FIRM HEARTS.

Sir Robert in his peroration said—"It is not fitting that I should prolong this debate. In the awful dawn of the greatest war the world has ever known, in the hour when peril confronts us such as this Empire has not faced for a hundred years, every vain or unnecessary word seems a discord. As to our duty all are agreed, east and west, shoulder to shoulder, with Britain and the other British Dominions in this quarrel. And that duty we shall not fail to fulfill as the honor of Canada demands. Not for love of battle, not for lust of conquest, not for greed of possessions, but for the cause of honor, to maintain solemn pledges, to uphold principles of liberty, to withstand forces that would convert the world into an armed camp, yes in the very name of the peace that we sought at any cost, save that of dishonor, we have entered into this war, and while gravely conscious of the tremendous issues involved and of all the sacrifices that they may entail, we do not shrink from them, but with firm hearts we abide the event."

In concluding his address Sir Wil- frid said:—"Sir, upon this occasion we invoke the blessing of God, not the god of battles, but the God of justice and mercy, and it is with an ample confidence in Providence that we appeal to the justice of our course. Even those who on principle do not believe in war admit that this was a just war, and that it had to be fought. That union of hearts which exists in the United Kingdom, exists in the same way in Canada, in Australia, in New Zealand, yea, even in South Africa—South Africa rent by war less than twenty years ago, now united under the blessing if British in- stitutions, and all British and Dutch stand ready to shed their blood for the common cause.

"Sir, there is in this an inspira- tion, and the hope is not a vague one, that through painful war the British Empire will emerge with a new bond of union, the pride of all its citizens, the living lesson to other nations."

BRUSSELS EVACUATION

Belgian Government Is Leaving For Antwerp.

Steady Advance of Germans Is Making Capital Untenable For Government Officials—Correspondent Who Made His Way Into German Lines Brings Back Interesting Information.

BRUSSELS, Aug. 18.—The Belgian Government is leaving at once Antwerp, the German advance having rendered Brussels untenable the seat of Government.

The fact that the authorities have decided to quit this city shows that the Germans have advanced so far that at least, Brussels may soon be occupied by the invaders.

For the past two days the Germans have been menacing the left flank of the allies with the plan of driving back from the defence of Brussels. They apparently have succeeded.

One of the last despatches out Brussels admitted that a German cavalry force had advanced as far as Wavre, 13 miles from the Belgian capital, but had been repulsed at a skirmish which was declared to have been unimportant. The Belgian War Office declared that Brussels is not in danger, but this apparently was not true.

Midway between Brussels and Antwerp, Belgium's important port, the city of Mechlin. To the west Brussels is Louvain, the reported location of the Belgian army headquarters. A German advance midway between Brussels and Louvain toward, in the direction of Antwerp would not be a surprising development in view of the news that the Belgian Government is quitting Brussels.

It is expected that the Legation will follow the Government to Antwerp, but the French Minister will remain here, sending the Counsel to Antwerp to keep in touch with the Belgian Government.

The Solr says that according to news which arrived Monday afternoon, which is confirmed by the War Office, the Belgian infantry, in conjunction with the French cavalry have brilliantly repulsed a German attack. The location of the engagement is not mentioned.

A special correspondent, who has several days been in the German lines in Belgium, and whose identity, for obvious reasons is not revealed, says that the Germans are bringing up from Luxembourg to the most northern limits of Belgium an incomprehensible number of men, artillery, horses and supplies.

The spirit of the men, however may be expressed in the words of German cavalry private, as follows:

"Our officers have told us that we must march until the whistle tells us to stop. They have told us to take a thousand shots to kill a man; so we are not afraid. We cannot afford to lose a million where the enemy lose thousands. We must make the enemy halt, or, at least, he will be late."

The Germans are the only Europeans who have been vigorously applying the caste system of government. They are able properly to direct enormous masses. Every German is prepared, and is on the march victorious, killed, or ordered to halt. The Germans' officers and men do not seem to be men who practice barbarities, as already charged, but cannot tell what they might do with blood runs red after a battle.

THREE ARMY CORPS BUSY.

Details of Great Britain's Expeditionary Army Arrive.

NEW YORK, Aug. 18. — British papers received here yesterday give details of the composition of the British expeditionary forces under command of Field Marshal Sir John French. The field force is composed of three army corps, each comprising two divisions, and there is an extra cavalry division under the command of Major-Gen. Edmund Allenby.

Each army corps is formed of 24 infantry battalions of about 1,000 men each on a war footing, six cavalry regiments, eight batteries of horse artillery of six guns each, eighteen batteries of field artillery, two Howitzer batteries, and troops of engineers, signal corps, army service corps and other details.

The British field force, therefore, should contain 72 infantry battalions, 18 cavalry regiments, 24 batteries of horse artillery with 144 guns, 54 batteries of field artillery with 324 guns, six Howitzer batteries and the usual details, according to the latest British army list issued at the end of July.

The First Army Corps is commanded by Lieut.-Gen. Sir Douglas Haig, the Third by Maj.-Gen. W. P. Putteney, and the Second was led by Lieut.-Gen. Sir James Grierson, who died suddenly yesterday, and has been replaced by another general.

Music of the Spheres. The ancients were of the opinion that the planets in their movement through space produced severally the seven notes of the gamut. This music, it was contended, was imperceptible to human ears on account of the fact that it was too powerful for our hearing. Others held that men did not hear it simply because they were so used to it, just as we do not notice the roar of the city from our constant familiarity with it. The real "music of the spheres" is purely intellectual, lying in the great and splendid fact of the universe of law and order.

Modern Finance. "We boys wish to raise some money for our club." "Well, you want to get out and run errands, clean up yards, collect old iron, sift ashes and earn the money." "Oh, no. Those methods are archaic. We propose to have a tag day."—Kansas City Journal.

We have exposed outside the town hall at Strassburg, in Alsace, guns which have captured from the much-valued artillery of France. The masses of German troops are intelligently directed by those who represent the military and imperial spirit of the German Empire, and they are bound to overcome the badly united and mixed peoples who compose the troops of those called the allies."

Germany undoubtedly is counting on the slowness of Russia in making her war preparations, and believing that Russia will only be in a position to menace the fatherland when the latter has crushed the enemies in the west.

Carranza Will Enter Capital. MEXICO CITY, Aug. 18. — The banks of the capital which closed last Thursday probably will re-open to-day. The question of a circulating medium is causing some uneasiness in business circles. At present four distinct issues of bank notes are being passed in ordinary business transactions.

To-morrow has been declared a national holiday, in honor of the entry into the capital of the main body of the Constitutionalist army and Gen. Carranza, the new provisional President. Elaborate preparations have been made for the reception of Gen. Carranza and his forces, and the inauguration of the new regime.

Priests Precede Russian Forces. LONDON, Aug. 18.—The St. Petersburg correspondent of The Daily Standard says that the Russian authorities are using two mighty forces to stimulate the zeal for war among the people—religious fervor and racial solidarity.

The marching Russian troops are preceded by a bearded and robe priest of the orthodox church, carrying the cross. Bands play alternately religious music and barbaric airs.

French Forces Have Passed the Valley of the Sarre.

Following Upon the Occupation of the Pass of Saale and the Battle at Blamont Operations Are Now Developing at Angle of Alsace and Lorraine Boundaries—Troops Near Saarburg.

PARIS, Aug. 18.—The most important news to-day comes from the east. It is a sequence of the occupation of the Pass of Saale, which has been known for several days, and of the fighting at Blamont, which was announced Sunday. Operations are now developing at the angle of the frontier where Alsace and Lorraine join.

Saale is at the entrance of the valley of the Bruche, which runs toward Strassburg, and in which there is a railway. From this point on Friday the French troops gained the heights of Mount Donon, which dominates the valley and also commands the valley of the Sarre. The following day, Saturday, the French forced an entrance into the valley of the Sarre and occupied the heights on the other side.

The French are already at Schirmeck. Below Mount Donon, in the valley of the Sarre, their front is about five kilometers from the important city of Saarburg. Farther west they are at Marsal, near Dieuz.

They are also descending the high valleys of Alsace, between the Bruche and the Sarre.

At the further end of the Donon Mountains the French have before them the fort of Mutzig, the first covering fortification of Strassburg. At the left is a non-fortified passage, twenty kilometers wide, between Donon and the Des Roulleuses Canal. This is one of the two gates of Lorraine, the other lying between a marshy region farther west and the defences of Metz.

At the other end of the line, in Belgium, the French have triumphed likewise in a less considerable but no less brilliant, combat. It took place about the city of Dinant, on the Meuse where ten thousand German cavalrymen were in action.

The interruption of operations to the north of Namur coincident with this attack by Germans to the south indicates, perhaps, a change of objective on the part of the enemy. In that case the great turning movement to the north would be replaced by a less extended movement in closer connection with the army that is occupying Luxembourg.

British troops are now operating with the French in the invasion of Alsace, according to despatches.

U. S. Grain For Britain.

STON, Aug. 18.—A shipment of more than 600,000 bushels of grain England in five British steamers be made from this port during resent week.

ROME, Aug. 18.—The St. Petersburg correspondent of the newspaper Messaggero, which usually is a well-informed organ, telegraphs that there are symptoms of a general insurrection in Prussian Poland.

The Poles, as shown in the news from St. Petersburg, Paris and London, are manifesting unbounded joy over the promise of the Czar of Russia to establish a new Poland on condition that the Poles, for their part, support Russia loyally in the present war. The Russian Emperor undertakes to confer complete autonomy on this new Poland. There will be freedom of language and religion.

The Russian appeal has gone forth to the Poles of Austria and Germany, and the information received by The Messaggero from St. Petersburg shows that they have grasped the opportunity so greatly fraught with hope for the future.

PRUSSIAN EAGLE TAKEN.

Parisian Crowds Gaze at Trophy Taken at Markerich.

PARIS, Aug. 18.—The first Prussian eagle captured by the French during the present war swung yesterday above the entrance to the French War Office in Paris. It is the red and black flag bearing a Prussian eagle in the centre, which was borne into battle by the first lower Alsatian Infantry Regiment, No. 132, of the German army, when it came into action at Sainte Blaise, also known as Sainte Marie Aux Mines and Markirch. The regiment came from the German fortress of Strassburg.

The flag was taken by the 10th battalion of French Rifles, and was brought to Paris Sunday night by Col.
Marcel Serret, formerly French military attache at Berlin.

Crowds of Parisians stood hour after hour yesterday staring at the captured standard.

Austrian Ambassador Sails.

FALMOUTH, Eng., Aug. 18.—The Austro-Hungarian Ambassador to Great Britain, Count Mensdorff, who left London Sunday night, arrived here by special train yesterday morning. He embarked on the Wilson Line steamer Argo for Genoa.

The Ambassador was accompanied by a numerous party, in all between 200 and 300 persons. Both the station here and the dock were cleared of the public when he arrived. The party was conveyed to the dock in a tomobiles.

A Patriotic Landlord.

MONTREAL, Aug. 18.—A Montreal landlord, who owns many tenements in Point St. Charles, has posted the following notice on all his properties:

"Mr. ——— wishes to announce that if the breadwinner of any family living in one of his houses volunteers for active service, the family may remain in their present dwelling, free of rent, during his absence.
This offer is good for one year from date."

Deafness Cannot be Cured.

by local applications, as they cannot reach the deafened portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure deafness, and that is by constitutional remedies. Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube is inflamed you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed. Deafness is the result, and unless the inflammation can be taken out and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destroyed forever;
nine cases out of ten are caused by Catarrh,
which is nothing but an inflamed condition
of the mucous surfaces.

The House of Commons, however, will not get down to business as quickly as had been anticipated. It was stated at the Prime Minister's office yesterday afternoon that the debate upon the address in reply to the speech from the throne would not be proceeded with until to-morrow.
When the Commons return from hearing the speech from the throne this afternoon, Sir Robert Borden will lay upon the table of the House, copies of all orders in council and other documents respecting the war, including the correspondence with the Imperial Government and then move that the vice-regal speech be taken into consideration on the following day.

How long the debate on the address may continue will depend to some extent upon how much of the Government's legislative program is forecast in the Premier's speech.
Should his statement to the House be a general one, not anticipating the specific proposals of the Government, the debate is not likely to be prolonged.

Some discussion, however, may be expected when the financial proposals of the Government come before the House for discussion. The Government, it is understood, will ask for wide powers on many subjects, including authority to regulate the prices of all food products and some of the Liberal members are contending that Parliament should be kept pretty constantly in session during the war, instead of being asked to delegate extraordinary powers to the Government. The best of good feeling seems to prevail among the members now here, party lines being for the time obliterated.

Col. Sam Hughes issued a statement last night expressing the hope "that the public would recognize the urgent importance of thoroughly guarding and protecting at the present time all stores of arms, ammunition and other munitions of war and the necessity of placing a sufficient guard for that purpose at all points where attack might be apprehended."

The horse dealers combine has been broken. Several carloads of horses for artillery purposes arrived in Ottawa yesterday and prices dropped at once to $140. The best prices given were $165.

The Militia Department found itself up against a combine on the part of many farmers and dealers, and the prices demanded for horses ranged all the way to $450. Toronto was the worst centre of the combine.

The Department is now in a position to control the situation, and will not pay over a certain figure, but the action of the Ontario farmers and horse dealers has delayed mobilization of the artillery and rendered the work more difficult. The difficulties, however, are now over.

It is announced for the information of all concerned that a despatch has been received from the War Office requesting that the widest publicity be given to the following army order:

"His Majesty the King has been graciously pleased to approve pardons being granted to soldiers who were in a state of desertion from the regular forces on Aug. 5, 1914, and who surrender themselves in the United Kingdom on or before Sept. 4, 1914, at any station abroad where there are regular forces on or before Oct. 4, 1914. They will forfeit all service prior to date of surrender, but such service may subsequently be restored under the conditions laid down in the King's regulations for restoration of service forfeited under section 79 of the Army Act. Deserters who enlist between Aug. 5 and Oct. 4, 1914, both days inclusive, in any colonial corps, which may have been or may be placed at the disposal of the Imperial Government for the war will be granted a free pardon and at the expiration of their service in such

SERGEANT UPHELD.

Militia Officials Say Hooten Only Did
His Duty In Shooting.

MONTREAL, Aug. 18.—Sergeant
George Hooten, of the Heavy Artillery, will not be court-martialled for the shooting and killing of Antoine Nottar, the French reservist, in front of the drill hall on Craig street, Friday afternoon.

A military court of inquiry will be held to-day, but only for the establishment of the facts of the case to be placed on record. Sergt. Hooten, it is said, was only doing his duty as a soldier in shooting, and will in no sense appear as a criminal before a court to-day.

Such is the tenor of the statement issued at militia headquarters yesterday morning by Col. S. J. Denison, officer commanding the fifth division at Montreal, through his general staff officer, Major G. W. Henderson. "The public do not realize," said the latter officer, "that Montreal is in a state of war, just as much as Germany or Belgium or any part of Europe at present. All I can say to the man in the street is, if a soldier in uniform gives you an order, obey it and don't argue."

MEXICAN FOLK TALES

WEIRD LEGENDS OF LONG AGO PERSIST IN SOUTH.

Swarthy Peons Still Cherish the Mysterious Folklore of the Aztecs and Their Spanish Conquerors—Mexico City Has Seen History of the Most Varied Type—Stories Lost In Antiquity.

Of all the relatively larger cities on the American hemisphere, the capital of Mexico is by far the oldest. Its beginning was long before Columbus sailed on his memorable voyage of discovery, when it was the seat of the Aztec empire. Civilization of a sort flourished there long before the first hardy pioneers settled along the northern Atlantic coast.

It has been a city of many vicissitudes. It has been held by Indian and Spaniard, by viceroy, by republican, by revolutionist, and by northern invader. Many of its streets are of the greatest antiquity. Many of its traditions are so old that no man knows whether they originated in the days of Montezumas or of the Conquistadores.

As is inevitable, the City of Mexico has its own peculiar folk lore, its mysterious legends. There are old tales that have been handed down from generation to generation by word of mouth and are still told by Mexican nurses to the children as they were told centuries ago.

A relic of Aztec folk lore is the tale of the Wailing Woman. Once, a long time ago, the story runs, there was a very bad woman in the City of Mexico. She gave birth to many children, but children bored her, and, as fast as one came upon the earth, she drowned it. Finally her conscience began troubling her. It is supposed that her punishment was to go through eternity looking for her children.

Frequently since then, it is said, watchmen have seen a woman in white, with a white mantilla over her head, roaming through the streets at night. Those who have inquired her business have received an answering inquiry as to where her children can be found. The greatest misfortune always overtakes those who question her. Most of them are stricken dead or become insane. This latter fate is said to have overtaken a gifted young army officer, who once tried to flirt with the Wailing Woman. It is said her lamentations are still heard at night, sometimes.

One story with a foundation in fact is the legend of Don Juan Manuel. As the tale survives in the folk lore Don Juan was an amiable enough gentleman, except that he had a bad habit of wandering out nights and murdering people. His custom was to approach somebody on the street, ask him the time, and, when he replied, telling him he was lucky because he knew the hour of his death, stabbed him to the heart. This went on until one night Don Juan killed his dearly beloved nephew, whom he had not recognized.

Stricken with remorse Don Juan confessed to his priest, who for penance ordered him to go alone at midnight to a certain church, before which was a gallows, and to tell his rosary under the gallows. Three nights he attempted to fulfill the command, but was driven back by the groans of the persons he had murdered. After begging in vain for a lighter penance he finally reached his goal under the gallows.

MILK AS A FOOD.

It Has More Dry Matter and Nutrition
Than Some Solids.

The food value of milk, though a hackneyed topic, is worth a moment's consideration, writes D. S. Burch in Farm and Fireside. Though it is a liquid, milk contains more dry matter than some solids. Skeptics can surprise themselves some dull day by putting a pan of milk in the inner part of a double boiler, evaporating it and observing the dry matter it contains. The figures that follow are interesting, too, from a food basis:

Foods.	Per cent dry matter.	Units of energy.
Milk .....	12.5	310
Mushrooms .....	11.9	185
Oysters .....	11.7	225
Spinach .....	7.7	96
Tomatoes .....	5.1	100

Notice that milk contains more food solids and units of energy than any article in the list. Milk also is more nourishing than tea, coffee or the common soups as ordinarily made.

It also has this advantage, that practically all of its solid matter is digested. It really contains no waste.

A quart of milk weighs about 2.1 pounds, which makes milk almost always cost less than 5 cents a pound, the cheapest of all common foods except flour and grain products, cheap cuts of meats and starchy vegetables such as potatoes. All these products require preparation and cooking, which add to all their original cost and should be considered in preparing foods.

The method for selecting the best grade of milk from the kinds available is a question which the consumer must help himself to answer. The best general rule is to observe the keeping quality of the milk. If kept in a clean place at a temperature of 60 degrees F. or less, good milk will remain sweet twenty-four hours after delivery.

SENSITIVE SEISMOGRAPHS.

They Serve Other Purposes Than Recording Earthquakes.

Contrary to popular belief, earthquakes are by no means rare occurrences. As a matter of fact, practically all places on the surface of the earth experience some kind of tremor or shake at least once an hour, and lesser tremblings are even more frequent. This fact has been established since the opening throughout the world of stations where seismographs record the slightest movement of this earth of ours.

The seismographs can be made to serve several other useful purposes besides the recording of earthquakes. Some of them are so delicate that a railroad train running a mile away will affect them.

Seismograph records have frequently been produced in court to show that the operation of heavy machinery produced sufficient vibration in near by buildings to make the owners of the factory liable for damages.

Probably the most unusual purpose to which the seismograph has ever been put is that of determining the amount of vibration in a locomotive as a result of unbalanced driving wheels. Engineers have devised some ingenious methods of cutting down this vibration, which means a greatly decreased consumption of coal.—New York American.

TALKING FROM THE CHEST.

Not Necessary to Put a Telephone Transmitter to the Mouth.

In case one does not care to stoop to a telephone while talking, or does not care to put the transmitter to the mouth, he can make himself heard by very simple means. Simply place the abdomen or the chest against the mouthpiece of the transmitter and talk into the open air, and the sound will get to the party on the other end. The whole chest wall and the wall of the abdomen vibrate in unison when the mouth is speaking, as they are a great sounding board, and they will transmit the proper sound waves to the diaphragm. This is easy to try and astonishing in result.

Another peculiar thing noticed in telephones at times is phantom talk heard in a receiver when one is waiting for central to give connection. Odd scraps of conversations may be heard in this manner. They are probably

MAKING STEEL RAILS.

How the Glowing Ingots Are Rolled Into Shape and Cut.

That rail mill was certainly a wonderful sight! The enormous glowing ingots were carried on a transfer to a sort of trough. The floor of the trough, or "table," as they call it, consisted of a series of rollers that were turning rapidly. Riding on them, the clumsy ingot sailed along until it bumped against a pair of large steel rollers. Immediately the rolls seized and hauled it through, like a cloth through a clothes wringer. We could not see that it had been flattened so very much, but we noticed that the corrugations had been cut into its per surface.

As it moved on the rollers turned over on its side before it was caught by the next pair or "stand" of rolls. It went through four stands in succession, turning over between each stand until it had made a complete turn. Then it came to what is called a "thigh" mill, which has three rolls, above the other. First the "bloom," it was now called, went between the middle and bottom rolls, but no sooner had it emerged than it was raised by the supporting roller "tables" both sides of the mill being raised simultaneously.

A Room and Its Furniture Literally Covered With Them.

Within easy walking distance of the old cathedral town of Chichester, England, is the Rising Sun, in North Bersted, a house of interest to all who collect stamps, for the little inn contains a room that is covered, every inch of it, with postage stamps!

Celling, walls, doors, chairs, tables, picture frames—all parts of the room except the floor—are thickly covered, while from the ceiling hang long festoons and ropes made of bundles of stamps for which there was no other room. There are fully 2,000,000 stamps pasted up and 1,000,000 more in these festoons, while great bundles, one of which holds 60,000 stamps, hang among the heavy loops.

But it is not only the amazing number of stamps that attracts the visitor's attention. There is evidence on all sides of great ingenuity. The pictures inside the stamp covered frames are of stamps themselves. The ceiling is ornamented with a great star. The arms of the neighboring town of Bognor are over the fireplace and the tablecloth shows the Eiffel tower! Queen Victoria is surprisingly lifelike in carefully chosen stamps of different colors. The Prince of Wales' feathers and the crown are also represented. Most of the stamps are penny English stamps, but there are others from all over the world. One door is a bright yellow, covered entirely with the Swan River stamps of Western Australia.

It is all the work of the landlord, who, already a stamp collector, thought of this as an amusing way of disposing of duplicates. He finished the room in celebration of the queen's jubilee.—Youth's Companion.

Few Beds in Bagdad.

About 60 per cent of Bagdad's population possess no beds. These poor people rest on blankets spread on the floors of their houses in the winter and on the roofs in the summer. Owing to the excessive heat of these regions sleep is made impossible elsewhere than on the roof or in the open gardens. It is an interesting sight to see how the women at sunset emerge from their houses to prepare the evening meal on the roof and spread the bedding for the night. Inasmuch as the climate is very dry, there is little to fear from exposure to the night air. While a considerable number of the roofs are surrounded by latticework to insure a certain amount of privacy, by far the larger number are quite exposed to the gaze of curious and inquisitive neighbors.

Scotland's Patron Saint.

Why was St. Andrew chosen as the patron saint of Scotland? This question has been asked many times, but the archdeacon of whom Dean Hole tells may be considered to have discovered the most satisfactory solution of the problem. "Gentlemen," said he (he was speaking at a St. Andrew's day banquet at the time), "I have given this difficult subject my thoughtful consideration, and I have come to the conclusion that St. Andrew was chosen to be the patron saint of Scotland because he discovered the lad who had the loaves and fishes."—Dundee Advertiser.

This went on until one night Don Juan killed his dearly beloved nephew, whom he had not recognized.

Stricken with remorse Don Juan confessed to his priest, who for penance ordered him to go alone at midnight to a certain church, before which was a gallows, and to tell his rosary under the gallows. Three nights he attempted to fulfill the command, but was driven back by the groans of the persons he had murdered. After begging in vain for a lighter penance he finally reached his goal under the gallows. And then angels from heaven came down and hanged him.

As a matter of history there was such a person in Mexico in 1641 and he was a dishonest collector of revenues. He was jailed, and, to secure his liberty, his wife was compelled to suffer incredible humiliations at the hands of a judge. Don Juan broke prison, went to his home, found the judge there, and stabbed him to death. Later he was mysteriously lynched one night before the church, and from this grew the legend that the angels had punished him for his sins.

A striking story of ghostly revenge is the legend of Don Juan de Nava, priest and guardian of his orphan niece, a beautiful girl. A Portuguese nobleman, Don Duarte de Sarraza, fell in love with her, and she reciprocated the attachment, but the priest rejected Don Duarte because he was known as a gambler. One night the priest came upon Don Duarte talking to his niece through her window. Duarte struck the old man with his dagger, which was imbedded in his skull, killing him. He threw the body, dagger and all, into a ditch. Just one year later Don Duarte was found dead at the site of the crime. Kneeling over him, one of its bony hands gripping his body by the throat, was a skeleton in priestly garments, with a dagger sticking in its skull.

Decidedly creepy is the story of Father Lecuona. This good priest, hurrying to the home of a friend, was met on the street by a woman, who told him a dying man wished to make a confession. Yielding to her entreaties, he went to a hovel to which she led him. There he found the emaciated form of a man who looked as if he had long been dead. The man told him that in ancient times he had died unshriven and had been blistering in hell ever since. As a special favor, however, he had been permitted to return to the earth to see if he could find a priest who would hear his confession.

Padre Lecuona thought he had to deal with a madman. He heard the confession and administered absolution. When he told his story at the house of his friends they scoffed at it, one of them saying the hovel had been uninhabited for many years. To make a test of it the priest and companions went to the house the next day. They found the door covered with cobwebs as if it had never been disturbed. When they finally unlocked it and went inside they found nothing except a fresh handkerchief. The priest identified it as one he had carried the night before.

Her Tongue.

They were talking of figures of speech.

"Have you ever noticed," said one, "how fond people are of vegetable metaphors when they are dealing with a woman? Her cheeks are 'roses,' her lips are 'cherry,' her hands are always 'lily' hands, her mouth is a 'rosebud,' her complexion is 'like a peach,' and her breath is 'fragrant as honeysuckle.'"

"You've forgotten one," said the cynic.

"What's that?"
"Her tongue. It is a 'scarlet runner'."

over its side before it was cawed by the next pair or "stand" of rolls. went through four stands in succession, turning over between each stand until it had made a complete turn. Then it came to what is called a "tigh" mill, which has three rolls, above the other. First the "bloom," it was now called, went between middle and bottom rolls, but no sooner had it emerged than it was raised lily, the supporting roller "tables" both sides of the mill being raised simultaneously.

The rollers of the tables were reversed, causing the bloom to be braced between the middle and top rolls. The tables were now lowered, the rollers reversed and the bloom's through between the middle and top rolls, as before, but this time was switched to one side, where rolls were a little larger in diameter and it was a tighter squeeze getting through them.

And so the bloom went back forth, being switched over to a tight pass each time until it was squeezed down to about eight inches square over forty feet long. Then it was in two, and each bloom went through another set of rolls that gradually worked it down to the size and shape of a rail. It was fascinating to watch that snakelike bar over a hundred feet long writhing as if alive.

As it came back for its last squeeze through the rolls a whistle was blown as a warning that the rolling was finished, and the rail was now on way to the saws. There were five circular saws that dropped down on the glowing metal and amid a shower of sparks sawed it into four ten-y rails. After that the rails were rolled off on "run out tables" to the "beds" to cool.—St. Nicholas.

MODERN JERUSALEM.

Very Different From the Ancient City In Its Oriental Setting.

Probably no modern city is more disappointing to the expectant traveler than is Jerusalem. We think of its ancient glory. We picture to our imagination the magnificent temple with its golden roof and the other great buildings of the hill of Zion. We recall its being the rendezvous in past times of a million pilgrims, and naturally think of it as an enormous city, comparable to London or New York of the present day. We think of it in its oriental setting of 2,400 years ago, but as we approach in modern railway train and climb the steep ascent which leads to the city behind an American engine our illusions disappear.

At last the guard calls out "Jerusalem!" and we disembark a mile from the city, get into a rickety modern bus which has evidently done duty in so many civilized communities, and are bounced over the rough roads and intolerable cobblestones within gates, until at last we are landed at our modern hotel, so different from the khan of ancient times.

And here our disillusion has only begun. The city of which we read accommodating 1,000,000 guests on a feast day could hardly today entertain 1,000 strangers within its walls, and since a multitude of pilgrims come every year from Russia and Italy and France and Germany, these nations

MAKING STEEL RAILS.

How the Glowing Ingots Are Rolled Into Shape and Cut.

That rail mill was certainly a wonderful sight! The enormous glowing ingots were carried on a transfer car, a sort of trough. The floor of the trough, or "table," as they call it, consisted of a series of rollers that were turning rapidly. Riding on them, the big, clumsy ingot sailed along until it bumped against a pair of large steel rolls. Immediately the rolls seized it and hauled it through, like clothes through a clothes wringer. We could not see that it had been flattened down very much, but we noticed that deep corrugations had been cut into its upper surface.

As it moved on the rollers turned it over on its side before it was caught by the next pair or "stand" of rolls. It went through four stands in succession, turning over between each stand until it had made a complete turn. Then it came to what is called a "three light" mill, which has three rolls, one above the other. First the "bloom," as it was now called, went between the middle and bottom rolls, but no sooner did it emerge than it was raised bodily, the supporting roller "tables" on both sides of the mill being raised up simultaneously.

But these, fine and even magnificent as they are, take us not back to the Jerusalem of 2,000 years ago, but tell us only of the modern city, where half a dozen great nations are building these hotels and hospitals in order to gain political and commercial advantage and patiently awaiting the time when they can oust from his possession the Turk who has so long held sway within the sacred city.—Christian Herald.

PAWNSHOP RUNNERS.

A Curious Feminine Profession That Exists Only In London.

A police court case has called attention to the existence in London of a vocation which is not known to exist anywhere else in the world. It is that of pawnbroker, a profession given over entirely to women who, in the poorer districts of London, undertake for a small compensation to carry the goods of their necessitous but sensitive neighbors to the pawnshops. Most of this work of pawning is done for women who are ashamed to be seen entering a pawnshop, but some of it is done for other women who are too busy to attend to the formality.

EATS ITS OWN TAIL

Queer Feast of the Tadpole Before It Becomes a Frog.

EVOLUTION OF A POLLYWOG.

Changes That Mark the Transition of This Curious Creature From an Aquatic to an Air Breathing Animal. How It Differs From the Toad.

There is no more interesting creature on earth than a pollywog, or tadpole, for it is a fish in the process of transformation into a land animal. The whole process can be watched if you put a few pollywogs in a milk bottle or jar full of water with some water plants.

In any of the ponds in the parks in the cities or in the pools in the suburbs in the proper season frog spawn can be found. It floats on the water like masses of sago pudding. A handful of this will furnish entertainment for several weeks and will at the same time give a lesson in evolution.

The spawn that floats on the ponds is the eggs of frogs. They lay it in the first warm days of spring, spreading it where the rays of the sun will warm it. Each egg contains a yolk, which is the food of the living germ within, and is coated with black, probably to attract as much heat as possible and at the same time to protect the germ from the penetrating ultra violet rays of the light, which would destroy it. The black yolk is in the center of a mass of transparent jelly, which is there as a protective covering.

If a small mass of spawn be placed in a jar of water and watched daily with an ordinary magnifying glass the black yolk of each egg will presently be seen to assume a sausage-like shape. Gradually this takes the form of a tiny pollywog, which soon begins to wriggle. After a few days these little black bodies wriggle out through the transparent jelly and attach themselves to bits of green sticks or weeds, which should be placed in the jar with them.

For some time they remain attached to such supports by a sucker, waiting for the opening of the mouth. As yet there are no visible eyes, but small stumps on each side of the head will be noticed. These are the gills. The whole skin if examined with a lens will be found to be covered with a sort of animated velvet pile, for its component threads are in constant motion, thereby creating a stream of fresh water to carry on the work of breathing, and a little later these movements will be strong enough to bear the body slowly along, so that locomotion at this stage is like that of the lowliest of living creatures, the protozoa.

When the mouth appears the inside of the great fleshy lips and the jaws will be found to be armed with rows of horny teeth numbering many hundreds. The gills will also have grown considerably. These, however, soon give place to internal gills, and the water taken at the mouth passes out again by a small funnel on the right side of the head. This fishlike stage disappears with the appearance of the forelegs.

The hind legs next appear, and as these develop the mouth is closed for alterations. No food can be taken, and during this enforced fast the tadpole supports life by consuming its tail.

FARMER'S WIFE ALMOST A WRECK

Restored to Health by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound—Her Own Story.

London, Ont.—"I am a farmer's wife and a very busy woman. Last summer

I was taken with severe pains in my back so bad that I could not get up or scarcely move without pain, and my periods were painful. My husband called in a good doctor and I was under his care for some time, but he did me little or no good.

One day a friend of mine told me to try Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound as she had been greatly helped by it. I began taking it and soon got well, and my periods became natural again. Since then I have had perfect health. In fact I have never felt so well in my life. Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound is a medicine many women need. If you think this letter will help other women please publish it."—Mrs. K. C. YOUNG, Tambling's Corner, London, Ontario, Canada.

Women who suffer from those distressing ills peculiar to their sex should not doubt the ability of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound to restore their health.

If you have the slightest doubt that Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound will help you, write to Lydia E. Pinkham Medicine Co. (confidential) Lynn, Mass., for advice. Your letter will be opened, read and answered by a woman, and held in strict confidence.

ROME'S COLISEUM.

It Got Its Name From a Nearby Gigantic Statue of Nero.

While thousands annually visit the Coliseum, few seem to question the origin of its unusual name, which is derived from a statue of Nero that stood near by. Being a great height, it was known as the colossus of Nero, so the vagaries of pronunciation of many hundred years created this unique name from "near the colossus." The Coliseum was founded A. D. 72 by the Emperor Vespasian. His son, Titus, completed it eight years later. Gaudentius is supposed to have been its architect, and by a cruel fate he was one of the many Christian martyrs whose blood has consecrated and made this glorious building sacred to posterity.

Twelve thousand captive Hebrews were employed in its building. During the progress of the shows that were given in this great amphitheater an awning was stretched on poles, and some of the brackets for the support of these are still to be seen. A few numbers are yet visible by which the arches could be reached by the spectators, having tickets of similar numbers.

One arch of extra width is thought to be the one under which the emperors of old Rome entered. An entrance similar on the opposite side had a sub-the side before it was caught by the next pair or "stand" of rolls. It went through four stands in succession, turning over between each stand until it had made a "complete turn." Then it came to what is called a "three lgh" mill, which has three rolls, one above the other. First the "bloom," as was now called, went between the middle and bottom rolls, but no sooner did it emerge than it was raised bodily, the supporting roller "tables" on both sides of the mill being raised up simultaneously.

The rollers of the tables were then reversed, causing the bloom to start back between the middle and top rolls. The tables were now lowered, their rollers reversed and the bloom sent through between the middle and bottom rolls, as before, but this time it was switched to one side, where the rolls were a little larger in diameter, and it was a tighter squeeze getting through them.

And so the bloom went back and forth, being switched over to a tighter pass each time until it was squeezed down to about eight inches square and over forty feet long. Then it was cut in two, and each bloom went through another set of rolls that gradually worked it down to the size and shape of a rail. It was fascinating to watch that snakelike bar over a hundred feet long writhing as if alive.

As it came back for its last sally through the rolls a whistle was blown as a warning that the rolling was finished, and the rail was now on its way to the saws. There were five circular saws that dropped down upon the glowing metal and amid a shower of sparks sawed it into four ten-yard lengths. After that the rails were carried off on "run out tables" to the "hot beds" to cool.—St. Nicholas.

MODERN JERUSALEM.

Very Different From the Ancient City In Its Oriental Setting.

Probably no modern city is more disappointing to the expectant traveler than is Jerusalem. We think of it in ancient glory. We picture to our imagination the magnificent temple with its golden roof and the other great buildings of the hill of Zion. We read of its being the rendezvous in passover of a million pilgrims, and we naturally think of it as an enormous city, comparable to London or New York of the present day. We think of it in its oriental setting of 2,000 years ago, but as we approach in a modern railway train and climb the steep ascent which leads to the city behind an American engine our illusion disappears.

At last the guard calls out "Jerusalem!" and we disembark a mile from the city, get into a rickety modern hack, which has evidently done duty in some more civilized community, and are unceremoniously over the rough roads and the tolerable cobblestones within the gates, until at last we are landed at a modern hotel, so different from the one of ancient times.

And here our disillusion has only begun. The city of which we read as accommodating 1,000,000 guests on the last day could hardly today entertain 100 strangers within its walls, and once a multitude of pilgrims come every year from Russia and Italy and France and Germany, these nations are bound to be armed with rows of horny teeth numbering many hundreds. The gills will also have grown considerably. These, however, soon give place to internal gills, and the water taken at the mouth passes out again by a small funnel on the right side of the head. This fishlike stage disappears with the appearance of the forelegs.

The hind legs next appear, and as these develop the mouth is closed for alterations. No food can be taken, and during this enforced fast the tadpole supports life by consuming its tail! This is slowly digested by a process not yet clearly understood. By the time this strange feast has ended the new mouth and the lungs have appeared—the tadpole has become a frog and leaves the water for the land. As a tadpole it fed by rasping off vegetable and animal matter with its teeth; as a frog it feeds by jerking food into its capacious mouth by the flick of a very sticky tongue.

Newts and toads in their pollywog stage can scarcely be told from frogs, but newts remain water animals, wearing tails, all their life. Some of them retain their gills also, but most of them develop lungs and have to come to the surface to breathe. There are few species which have neither gills nor lungs and therefore do not breathe at all, their blood being oxidized by the skin alone. Adult frogs spend most of their time in the water, but they must come to the surface to breathe. Toads once they leave the water do not return to it.—New York World.

Dance Madness Nothing New.

The polka was comparatively new when Trollope wrote some of his novels. In "The Three Clerks" a young heiress speaks of a certain Frenchman as "the most delicious polkist you ever met. He has got a new back step that will amaze you." There was said to be in practice "every variation of the waltz and polka that the ingenuity of the dancing professors of the age has been able to produce."—Detroit Free Press.

Where the Shoe Pinched.

The Prima Donna (after the first act)—I won't go on again unless that box party makes less noise! I nearly had hysterics! The Manager (in surprise)—I didn't hear any noise. The Prima Donna—You didn't? Why, they encored that upstart of a contralto four times.—Puck.

Putting Them at Ease.

Precedence is not the only puzzle in official and social circles in any city, but to say the right thing at the right time is equally necessary.

"To make mistakes in speech is suicidal," said a state department official recently. "Let it not be as in the case of Mrs. Brody, who gave a party, and when all the guests were in the parlor she entered with a beaming smile and said:

"Do make yourselves at home, ladies. I'm at home myself, and I wish you all were."

Tricking the Hens.

Chinamen have a way of tricking hens so that they assist in the hatching of fish. Fish eggs are carefully placed in an eggshell, which is then sealed and placed under an unsuspecting hen. In a few days the spawn is warmed into life, and the contents of the shell are then cast into a shallow pool, where the sunshine completes the work.

Seven thousand captive Hebrews were employed in its building. During the progress of the shows that were given in this great amphitheater an awning was stretched on poles, and some of the brackets for the support of these are still to be seen. A few numbers are yet visible by which the arches could be reached by the spectators, having tickets of similar numbers.

One arch of extra width is thought to be the one under which the emperors of old Rome entered. An entrance similar on the opposite side had a subterranean passage leading to the Palatine. Four rows of cells were the domicile of the wild beasts, and during a series of shows given in honor of the Emperor Hadrian's birthday a thousand of these animals were slaughtered. Gladiatorial combats were also eagerly watched, and in these even women would sometimes take part. Of the many Christian martyrs the Coliseum has claimed the most noted was St. Ignatius, bishop of Antioch. Closely following this crime 115 Christians were shot down with arrows, and, as usual, this hideous sight was viewed by a sanguinary horde.—Baltimore American.

Just a Smell of This Deadly Poison Would Kill Instantly. The discoverer of prussic acid was instantly killed by inhaling one whiff of his own handiwork. Pure prussic acid is never sold or handled. The smell of it is always fatal. It kills not in three minutes or half an hour, but the instant it enters the lungs as a gas. The mixture ordinarily sold as prussic acid is 98 parts water to two parts of the drug. Even in this form it is very deadly. A 20 per cent mixture of the acid would kill nearly as quickly as if pure.

Atropine, though it has no harmful odor, is so deadly that as much of it as would adhere to the end of a moistened forefinger would instantly cause death. Cyanide of potassium has a pleasant smell which is not injurious, but a small quantity swallowed kills at once.

Pure ammonia if inhaled would cause death almost as quickly as prussic acid. When a carboy of nitric acid is broken some one has to suffer. It will burn wood, eat through iron plates and destroy whatever it touches. Such an accident once happened in an acid factory. Every one ran away, leaving the acid to amuse itself by setting fire to things. Soon it was seen that the building would be destroyed and hundreds of people thrown out of work, and four men volunteered to put out the fire in the acid room. They succeeded and came out all right. Five hours later all were dead.

Helping the Physicians. Traveling in the train with my friend the doctor, writes a correspondent in the Manchester Guardian, I observed a fellow passenger earnestly reading a "popular" medical work issued in parts. "That kind of thing must be bad for your trade," I suggested, but the doctor smiled and denied my statement. "Quite the contrary," said he. "The first part has brought me nineteen cases of imaginary appendicitis, and I anticipate bronchitis and Bright's disease of a similar mild type will be prevalent among my patients when part B is issued, with all the more easily pronounced ailments to follow as the publication goes on."

Winning Ways. "What a pathetic face that young fellow has! His eyes seem so reproachful."

"Yes. In the lunchroom where he worked he pulled in more tips than all the other waiters combined."—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

Practical Proof.

"Yes, my son, I want you to make yourself ambidextrous. I want you to be able to use one hand just as skillfully as you do the other."

"That's me, dad. I can lick any boy in my class with either hand."—New York World.

In all God's creation there is no place appointed for the idle man.—Gladstone.

You Must Break The "Family Group" When It Comes To Music

EACH one's taste is individual—his own—and different. No one, not even a genius—could suit you all. And yet every one in the family loves music and regrets the silent piano none can master. The spans the "Great Divide" between you and music. It enables you to play as though yours were the most perfectly trained fingers in the world. The intricacies of MacDowell's harmonics—the crashing chords of Liszt's stupendous Rhapsodies—the brilliant two steps or the dream-like waltzes of Strauss; all roll from under your fingers without effort or fault. You play what you love most—in the way that suits you best. And so does everyone else in the family. The New Scale Williams Player Piano combines the technical ability of the world's greatest musicians with the opportunity for your own individual interpretation. O Church of true brave, or strong, or true

This is the mission that belongs to you,
To lead the van against the hosts of Wrong,
Nor chant, till Error dies, thy triumph song.

In the far east, the savage Sphinx of War,
Demands his daily victims freshly slain,
Horror holds carnival, meanwhile afar—
Pity has fled the scene, nor comes again.

Hear the low moaning and the labored breath,
Where Age, and Youth, and vigorous Manhood lie
Mangled and bleeding, crying out for Death
To come and spare them the long agony.

And amid prayers, and sighs, and curses deep,
And man's hot, bitter tears, in secret shed,
For mother, wife, or child—the brave can weep—
Earth opens to receive her slaughtered dead.

Alas! for homes bereft where mothers weep,
And sisters grieve, and orphans mourn in vain,
And widows, worn with sorrow, vigils keep,
And broken-hearted friends bewail the slain.

For this is war, with all its pomp and show,
And gilded bunting, music and display,
How oft Youth's dream of glory ends below,
In a crushed mass of senseless, bleeding clay.

O God of battles! Thou art even still
The Prince of Peace, we cry to Thee until Thou dost stretch forth Thy mighty hand and stay
This awful strife, that rends our hearts to-day,
And Church of God, down on thy knees and pray,
That rulers all may learn some better way.

ELECTIONS IN FRANCE.

They Are Held on Sunday and Rarely Finished in One Day.

In France elections are held on Sunday. Universal manhood suffrage is the rule. Every Frenchman of twenty-one years of age, on proof of six months' residence, is a legal voter at the elections to the chamber, saving only soldiers on active service and others disqualified for bankruptcy and criminal reasons. Because of the number of candidates the first day's polling in many districts is not final. Where no candidate receives an absolute majority, a second election is held. It often happens that from one-third to one-fourth of the elections for deputies are not finally decided until the second poll, when not infrequently one or more candidates in a district have withdrawn.

The polling begins at 8 in the morning and lasts until 6 in the evening. Instead of regularly appointed clerks and election officials, three volunteers take charge of the "urn" in which the ballots are deposited and conduct the proceedings. One of the penalties of being first to appear is the likelihood of being impressed into service as one of the assessors, of whom two, both independent voters, must serve with the "president of the ballot." The counting of the ballots is also done by volunteers called for from among the electors.

In the absence of the party system it is difficult strictly to classify the candidates. In a general way they range themselves in groups around certain well known political leaders.—New York World.

Pastor Russell

preached to-day from the text, "I unto you, lawyers! for ye have taken away the Key of Knowledge: ye entered not in yourselves, and they that were entering in ye hindered."—Luke 11:52.

The word lawyer in New Testament usage, the Pastor began, has very different meaning from usage. It applied to those religious teachers of the Jews who made special professions of sanctity and heart and earnest desire to know God's will and to teach it to the people. To-day the corresponding class are designated Doctors of Divinity.

It was customary amongst Jews, the speaker continued, to give lessons from the Law and Prophets should be read daily in synagogues. The people were familiar with the letter of the Scriptures. The majority of them were illiterate; for educational facilities then were not what they are now. Consequently only a few claimed to have knowledge of the spiritual meaning of the Law and the Prophets. They were chiefly of the literary and wealthy classes. To these common people looked for guidance.

The people were hungry for the Message which Jesus brought. The nation would have gone over promptly to Jesus if the Doctors of the Law had given the word. More so Jesus' teachings harmonized the Law and the Prophets, over which Scribes and Pharisees and the Sadducees long had disputed. Had the Doctors of the Law been as hungry for Truth as were the people, undoubtedly their differences in interpretation of Scripture would have speedily have disappeared in the light then shining upon the Bible through the Holy Spirit, Jesus' His Apostles being Jehovah's messengers.

The Pastor then drew a parallel between the Jewish Age and the present and the Gospel Age and Harvest. Now, as then, God's people are perishing for lack of knowledge. Now, as then, the Doctors of Divinity will not use the Key of Knowledge themselves; and additionally they have buried it from the people under a mass of forms and ceremonies.

But Is Knowledge Necessary?

It was then shown that in Lord's day the Jewish Doctors of Divinity contented themselves with

When He Goes Wrong.

When a solicitor passes his examinations his name is entered on the "rolls" of the legal profession. Should he ever become guilty of professional misconduct his name is "struck off the rolls."

It is a grave matter. Any person having a complaint against a solicitor in reference to his professional conduct is supposed to forward it to the Incorporated Law society, the body which rules the legal profession. His private life doesn't trouble the society unless he is convicted of a criminal offense.

Having received the complaint and evidence in support of it, the society brings the matter before a divisional court composed of two or three of the most distinguished judges on the bench. The solicitor is given every chance of defending himself, but if,
after hearing the evidence, the judges decide that he is guilty his name is "struck from the rolls." Should the offense be a minor one, caused more by misunderstanding than fraud, the solicitor may be suspended for a period and allowed to practice again at the expiration of it.

A solicitor cannot be "struck off the rolls" for negligence or bankruptcy. A client's remedy in the first case is to bring an action against him for damages. Bankruptcy is adjudged to be a misfortune and therefore is not "professional misconduct."—London Tit-

It was then shown that in our ord's day the Jewish Doctors of Divinity contented themselves with telling the people what to do and what not to do, but did not help them to understand the deep meaning of the Law and the Prophets. So is to-day, the speaker declared; a minister stands as a representative and mouthpiece of the Church creed, which in roundabout terms declares that whoever does not live a saintly life will suffer an eternity of torment. Is not this a grievous burden put upon any conscientious soul? He asked. Has it not caused untellable anguish to many of God's true people? Has it not driven from God and the Bible thousands of the most intelligent minds in the world?

As the Jewish Doctors of Divinity carried no such burdens, neither do Christendom's Doctors of Divinity. In private they acknowledge that they carry no such burdens. In public they give the inference that they do—not so much by positive terms as by implication, tone, inflection of the voice and by the fact that they present creeds which so teach. ## You don't have to take substitutes for DUSTBANE "Catches Sweeping Dust"

IF you ask for Dustbane, and are offered a substitute, don't take it! Instead, write us, telling the name of the dealer who offered you the imitation, and the date, and we will send you, by parcels post, a big tin (regular 35 cent size) of Dustbane absolutely free.

There are no strings whatever to this offer. A few unscrupulous dealers have been palming off cheap imitations to customers who have asked for Dustbane, because they have unwisely bought stocks of the inferior goods and are anxious to get rid of it. If you accept imitations offered as being "just as good" as Dustbane, you will be dissatisfied, and may jump to the conclusion that all sweeping powders are alike.

That is why we are anxious for you to get genuine Dustbane, because you will be so well pleased with it that you will never sweep without it again. We also want to know the names of any dealers who use Dustbane's popularity as a means to get rid of stocks of imitation goods.

Dustbane is made under Canadian patents Nos. 89,819 (Nov. 1st, 1904), 95,497 (Oct. 10th, 1905), 102,643 (Dec. 18th, 1906) and 107,575 (Sept. 24th, 1907). These patents absolutely protect its formula, and no other sweeping powder can contain the ingredients which make it possible for Dustbane to kill germs, prevent sweeping dust from rising, purify the air, and brighten floors and carpets.

Good dealers won't try to give you substitutes. If they are out of Dustbane they will frankly tell you so, and get it for you as quickly possible.

A Tangled Web

BY MRS. ALEXANDER

Author of "Beaton's Bargain," "His Perfect Trust,"
"By Another Name," "Her Heart's Idol,"
"Half a Truth," "His Rival."

"Surely, my dear Mrs. Ruthven, no legal redress could possibly atone for the wrong done?" said Lady Dorrington, in uncertain accents, very different from her usual decided tone, so appalled was she by the prospect of the commonplace vulgarity of an action in court.

"Are you afraid of a breach of promise trial," was her guest's counter-question, accompanied by a mocking contemptuous laugh. "That would be a very weak and inefficient payment of the debt I owe Mr. Marsden—but I will not allow myself to speak more on the subject. It must be most painful to you; it is too much for me. I can write no more to-day. May I trust to your kindness to send for Sir Harley Portman? And will you be so good as to ask Virginia to bring me my medicine? I must rest and be quiet now."

Lady Dorrington felt herself dismissed.

If she had gone to Mrs. Ruthven in an anxious, angry frame of mind, she left her with a sense of danger and trouble intensified tenfold. The change in Mrs. Ruthven's manner from its ordinary caressing softness to the abrupt decision of one who knew her power and would use it, seemed to take the ground of superior position and higher breeding from under the elder woman's feet. Mrs. Ruthven was, indeed, not to be trifled with. The vagueness of her threats made Lady Dorrington still more uneasy. Did she know of any crooked corners in Clifford's conduct which would brand him with disgrace, were they known and blazoned abroad? If so, how merciless she would be. "I wish I never had anything to do with her," thought Lady Dorrington, as she sat down in the refuge of her own morning-room. "It is useless to try and help Clifford. He is hopeless. But I think I must send him a line of warning. I am really afraid of that woman. I shall never care to be with her again. She was naturally angry, and I do not wonder at it; but there was a murderous look in her eyes. I do believe she has a large share of Eastern blood! How unprincipled it was of Mrs. L'Estrange and Nora to attract Clifford! They are quite aware that I am most anxious he should marry Mrs. Ruthven quite; yet they set themselves against me, and I have been so fond of Nora, and so kind to her too."

Here her reflections became chaotic. Though of the strong-minded order of woman, Lady Dorrington had both family pride and family affection in abundance. The idea of open scandal or disgrace attacking her brother was intolerable, and her anxiety to shield him was not one whit lessened by her indignation and wrath with his inconsiderate folly!

Clifford Marsden meantime sped Londonward, well content with the result of his visit. He had put matters in train; there was no room now for Lady Dorrington to say that he had kept her in the dark about so me? I know what her plans were, and it makes me uncomfortable to feel that I have been the cause of their defeat. I am really fond of Lady Dorrington."

"And you naturally object to be converted into an instrument of torture?" said Marsden lightly. "She is mistaken, however; she would never have succeeded in marrying me to her mind, even if I had not met a certain witch of a kinswoman. Why, Nora, you must not look dismayed. When you have been Isabel's sister-in-law for a year or two, she will think me the luckiest fellow going, especially when she sees the reformation you will work in me."

"I share Nora's feeling that your only near relative's objection to your marriage is peculiarly unfortunate; perhaps it might be as well to postpone."

"Great heavens! No!" interrupted Marsden, energetically. "You know I have agreed to put off the wedding till after the 15th of February, and that is an age—nearly two months off."

"Barely enough time to make due preparations," said Mrs. L'Estrange, laughing.

"Preparations! Why, very few are necessary. Nora and I are old friends and don't want to astonish each other with finery," urged Marsden.

Nora laughed, and tried to rouse herself.

"I am very fond of pretty things, I assure you," she said.

"And is there any reason that the power of choice or purchase should leave you when Nora L'Estrange becomes Nora Marsden?"

"And Mrs. Ruthven is really getting better?" asked Mrs. L'Estrange.

"Really and truly this time—recovering sufficiently to dabble in business, which her soul loves. I was amazed this morning by a summons from my lawyer, which delayed my appearance here, and on reaching the office, I found it was an offer from Mrs. Ruthven to rent Evesleigh for five years at a higher rent than any yet proposed. Fortunately, I had not absolutely come to terms with the man who has been nibbling at it for some time, so I determined to give the fair widow the preference."

"It is curious her wishing to live at Evesleigh, when she wanted to fly from it after that dreadful robbery," said Mrs. L'Estrange. "I suppose those jewels will never be found, nor the robber."

"Not after this lapse of time, I fancy," returned Marsden lightly. "I should think the thief is tolerably safe."

"I forgot to tell you that Mr. Winton passed through town while you were away," said Mrs. L'Estrange. "He seems disposed to return to India before his holiday is half over. He has gone down to see his uncle, Giles Winton, before he goes."

"Ah! Mark Winton is a capital fellow, in spite of his solemnity. You did not make yourself agreeable enough to him, Mrs. L'Estrange, or he would not be in such a hurry to

now I find he is willing to take me, I wish to break my word to you." Such was the simple fact. No! She never, never could make such an avowal. It were best she should bear the penalty of her own weakness in having too readily yielded to persuasion, to her overzealous desire to throw off the pain and shame of caring for a man who preferred another. Besides, what would Winton himself think if, after telling him she was to marry Marsden, she declared herself free? Probably that she was a heartless jilt.

No, there was but one way for her to walk in; she must lock up her secret and her sufferings in her own heart; leave Winton to conquer his fancy for herself, which a strong sensible man, as he was, no doubt, would; forget him quickly, if possible; marry Marsden, and love him, and do everything for him in the spirit of affection till love came. Oh! would it come? And if it did, would she not be a traitor to her true, first love? Destiny was too potent for her; she could only conquer, by bearing her fate!

Meantime Lady Dorrington made no sign. The society papers announced that Mrs. Ruthven has sufficiently recovered to remove to To-quay, where she had taken Lord G—'s beautiful villa, and added a hint that "as we asserted some time since, there was no truth in the report that she was about to contract an alliance with a certain squire of high degree in the Midlands whose brilliant success as a sportsman, yachtsman, and man of the world, could not insure that other and greater success which, no doubt, was dearest to him of all."

Mrs. L'Estrange and Nora both watched with uneasiness for some token of amity from Lady Dorrington, and the seeming estrangement of his only sister greatly increased

Nora's reluctance to become Marsden's wife.

Nothing, however, can put the drag on time's chariot wheels; the days went by swiftly yet heavily. Nora was surprised how few opportunities she found for being alone with Mrs. L'Estrange. She longed to ascertain what tie had existed between Mark Winton and her step-mother. Yet she never had a chance for leading up to that subject. It was one respecting which she could not ask a simple, straightforward question, and she never was long enough alone with Mrs. L'Estrange to approach the topic with masked batteries.

Marsden was constantly with them, always charming, obliging, sympathetic; and it needed all Nora's tact and ingenuity to avoid the frequent tete-a-tete interviews he was perpetually contriving, to escape his caresses, from which she shrunk with a sort of dread she was herself ashamed of.

Sometimes she could not conceal this shrinking from him, and it filled him with an angry despair, that called forth her deepest remorse, and obliged her to atone so amply, that Marsden was once more joyous and hopeful.

"If you knew all you have cost me!" he would sometimes cry, "all I have risked for you, you would not cut me to the soul, with this accursed cold prudery! Not that I would hesitate to pay any price that would make you mine, but I sometimes doubt you have any heart to give."

Then Nora would tremble, and assure him how dear his happiness was to her, and take his hand in hers, and stroke it with gentle kindness, and Marsden would become reasonable once more.

For Bea, this was a heavenly interval of treats and toys, the circus and the panorama. Indeed, as at the harvest of the sugar-cane, all the days that are coming." "Do not think of such things, Clifford," said Nora, more touched by his words than he was aware, she leaned forward to press her gently to his cheek. "I trust I may have many, many happy years before you."

"Will you make me happy?" "I will do my best for you, d Clifford. I will, indeed."

"God bless you darling!" kissed her hair, her brow, her cheek quickly, passionately, and letting her as Mrs. L'Estrange re-entered room.

"It is not very large, and if I will send it over to the cook, Brookdale, I shall be much obliged she said, handing the packet to her. After a few more words Marsden bid them adieu and departed. Mrs. L'Estrange and her step-daughter drew nearer the fire, and sat some minutes in silence.

"I did not think Mr. Marsden bright as usual," said the former length.

"No. He was a little more serious than usual," returned Nora.

"But he is always pleasant and kind. I really think, dear Nora, you are wonderfully fortunate. Yours a case where true love has smoothed."

"The ides of March have come, I gone."

"That is quite an uncanny speech, Nora." There was another pause.

Then Nora, gathering up her resolution, said quietly:

"Did Clifford Marsden know Mark Winton and his cousin when they were all boys?"

"Yes. They used to be in Oldbric now and then, and he was at his father's rectory once."

"Will you think me unwarrantably intrusive if I ask you a few questions about those by-gone days?" laid her hand gently on her step-mother's knee.

Mrs. L'Estrange smiled thoughtfully.

"No, dear, I can tell you anything and there is not much to tell."

"Did you know Clifford before you married my father?"

"Scarcely knew him. I met him several times. He was a delightful boy at nineteen or twenty."

"Was he a great friend of Mark Winton's?"

"No. More the friend of the old Mark. You know both the Wintons had the same name, it used to me confusion. They had not been brought up exactly together. They were at different schools, but he were sent to study with my father one for the army, the other for India. We used to distinguish them as Black and Red Mark. They made Clifford Marsden's acquaintance at his aunt Mrs. Atherley's at Oldbric, where he came down from London to them once, for a few days, to his father's rectory in Hampshire. What a sweet home it was. I wish ages away back that time seems!"

"And," whispered Nora, leaning lightly against her companion, as she fixed her eyes on the glowing coals, "Mark Winton was very fond of you?"

"Well," returned Mrs. L'Estrange with a quiet smile, "he fancied was—he said he was—and I, a foolish, motherless girl, believed him."

"But was he not faithful a true?" cried Nora, infinitely surprised.

"There might have been a mistake somewhere; but it all came home enough on me," returned Mrs. L'Estrange. "There was a gentleman in our neighborhood who wished to marry him—a very good fellow I was inclined to like him, but as Mark made me believe he loved I thought of no other, and I her too." Here her reflections became chaotic. Though of the strong-minded order of women, Lady Dorrington had both family pride and family affection in abundance. The idea of open scandal or disgrace attacking her brother was intolerable, and her anxiety to shield him was not one whit lessened by her indignation and wrath with his inconsiderate folly!

Clifford Marsden meantime sped Londonward, well content with the result of his visit. He had put matters in train; there was no room now for Lady Dorrington to say that he had kept her in the dark about so important a matter as his marriage, and she would no doubt impart the knowledge to Mrs. Ruthven. They would have ample opportunity to abuse him together, and by the time they all met again the worst would have blown over.

He arrived in town late, and resolved not to disturb Nora and Mrs. L'Estrange at that hour. Next morning would do. He had a deep, though unacknowledged, conviction that he must be careful and cautious in his conduct to Nora.

Yet in spite of his love, there were moments when a kind of lurid revelation flashed aross him, that, if he could not succeed in winning her coldness into something akin to his own fire, the day might come when he would hate her with a deadly hatred, av, and revenge himself cruelly on her, if she persisted in her maddening indifference. He could scarce endure the torture it gave him, when she shrunk from the caresses with which he would fain have loaded her, and his longing for the reciprocity of natural, unforced tenderness, was painfully intense.

However, absence always made him more hopeful. He had not seen Nora for three days, and who could tell what change that interval might have wrought in the incomprehensible heart of a young girl?

The post brought him a large number of letters, most of which needed notice, and before Marsden had finished the briefest replies, he was informed that a gentleman wished to see him. This proved to be a clerk from the office of Messrs. Cookson & Dunn, his solicitors, who was the bearer of a letter announcing that a fresh tenant for Evesleigh had offered better terms, and it was desirable that the question should be discussed without loss of time.

Finally, it was past midday before Marsden could present himself at S—Street.

Nora was looking, he thought, well, and very handsome. She had more color than usual, and her manner was less tranquilly composed. She seemed disturbed by his presence, and was red and white alternately. But her welcoming smile was as sweet as ever, and Marsden tasted some moments of intoxicating delight, fancying that the icy indifference he so much dreaded was at last melting before the passionate ardor of his advances.

"I am glad to see you looking better, Nora," he said, taking his accustomed place beside her work-table. Work was her great resource—such a blessed occupation for eyes and hands.

"Yes," remarked Mrs. L'Estrange. "I assure you I was quite nervous about her the night before last, she had a sore throat and looked ghastly; she is much brighter to-day."

"And Lady Dorrington?" asked Nora. "How is she? And did you—did you tell her?" coloring crimson.

"I did," said Marsden, smiling. "Murder will out!"

"Was she very angry?" persisted Nora, eagerly. "I am sure she is displeased."

"She wishes you had more money, that's all, I think."

"There is a good deal more, I imagine, Clifford; she is angry with

"Not after this lapse of time, I fancy," returned Marsden lightly. "I should think the thief is tolerably safe."

"I forgot to tell you that Mr. Winton passed through town while you were away," said Mrs. L'Estrange. "He seems disposed to return to India before his holiday is half over. He has gone down to see his uncle, Giles Winton, before he goes."

"Ah! Mark Winton is a capital fellow, in spite of his solemnity. You did not make yourself agreeable enough to him, Mrs. L'Estrange, or he would not be in such a hurry to run away," and Marsden threw an expressive glance at Nora as he spoke, which sent an icy, painful dart through her heart. What had not this fatal impression of Marsden's coast her? "That is the uncle who brought him up with his own son, is it not?" continued Marsden.

"Yes," said Mrs. L'Estrange. "The son is dead," she sighed.

"I did not know that. Then Winton is the old man's heir?"

"I believe so," Mrs. L'Estrange rose and closed her writing-book. "You will, I am sure, excuse me, as I promised—"

"Pray do not apologize," cried Marsden gleefully.

"Is it not very fine to-day?" exclaimed Nora. "Do you know, Clifford, I should enjoy a drive so much."

"Would you? Well, I will go and find a conveyance, and a tolerable pair of horses; you shall drive to your heart's content."

"And you, Helen?"

"My dear, you know I am engaged," and with a smile and nod of the head Mrs. L'Estrange left them together.

"And you are glad to see me back, Nora, as glad as the last time I returned?" said Marsden, taking her hand and kissing it repeatedly.

"Yes! Oh, yes only I feel nervous, uneasy, not a bit, like myself. I am distressed about Lady Dorrington. I scarcely can say what I fear. But I feel I want air and motion."

"Very well, we shall have a nice drive. I shall be back in about three quarters of an hour. You will be ready?"

"Quite ready!" Still Marsden lingered.

"Look at me Nora," he said softly. "You have not given me a kiss to-day."

"Do not ask me," exclaimed Nora. "I can not, not now." She half turned from him, but held out her hand.

He kissed it again, murmuring, "As you will, darling!" and went away not displeased; he fancied she must be waking from the unconsciousness that chilled him.

These were terrible days and nights to Nora L'Estrange. Her heart knew no rest from gnawing regret for the miserable misunderstanding which had wrecked her life, and the torturing doubt as to what was best and right to do. She was the source of sorrow to the man she loved most truly, she was deceiving the lover whom she sincerely liked, and, Winton out of the way, might have loved. Then, although she had been mistaken as regard Mark Winton's feelings, it did not follow that her ideas respecting Mrs. L'Estrange were also wrong; perhaps in his disappointment Winton might turn to her. If so, Nora felt she ought to be pleased, but she was not by any means pleased with the idea; on the contrary, it was very bitter. Then what was the right course to take with Marsden? Poor fellow, he was so fond of her. How could she break with him, and break his heart? And suppose she had the hardihood to tell Marsden the truth, how would it sound to say, "Despairing of Mark Winton, I promised to be your wife;

me!" she would sometimes cry, "all I have risked for you, you would not cut me to the soul, with this accursed cold prudery! Not that I would hesitate to pay any price that would make you mine, but I sometimes doubt you have any heart to give."

Then Nora would tremble, and assure him how dear his happiness was to her, and take his hand in hers, and stroke it with gentle kindness, and Marsden would become reasonable once more.

For Bea, this was a heavenly interval of treats and toys, the circus and the panorama. Indeed, as at the harvest of the sugar-cane, all came in for a share of sunshine and good things, and at times Nora wondered at her own insensibility and ingratitude.

One evening, shortly before Christmas, Marsden had looked in later than usual, after dining with some friends at his club. He stood on the hearth-rug, retailing the political and other gossip he had heard, and questioning Mrs. L'Estrange and Nora respecting their shopping.

"Mrs. Ruthven is coming to town next week," he said. "I had a talk with Shirley to-day. He had been down to see her; she has not deigned to communicate with me, but I hear through my solicitor she has sold that villa she was so wild to get a month or six weeks ago, and made fifteen hundred pounds by the transaction."

"Is it possible!" exclaimed Nora.

"Some people seem to have the power of turning all they touch to gold," said Mrs. L'Estrange.

"Fortunate people," returned Marsden. "Talking of gold, I see Winton's old uncle died rather suddenly on the thirteenth, so, I suppose he'll have plenty to do settling his affairs, instead of rushing back to punish the unworthy in his district."

"Was old Mr. Winton rich?" asked Mrs. L'Estrange, carelessly.

"I am not sure. I think I have heard that he made money or saved money of late years. He lived at a little shooting box he had on the edge of a Yorkshire moor. I don't think he ever held up his head since 'Black Mark' went to the bad."

"Do not say that Mr. Marsden!" exclaimed Mrs. L'Estrange, earnestly. "Father and son misunderstood each other, but the son was more sinned against than sinning." Her delicate face flushed as she spoke.

"You are more charitable than most people, Mrs. L'Estrange, to one who, if not sorely belied, did not care for any one save himself, at any rate, it is likely Red Mark, as we used to call him, will step into his shoes."

"Old Mr. Winton had a daughter, I think?"

"Yes, who married against his will. I don't know what became of her. Perhaps she may come in for some of the father's money. But I must bid you good-bye, as well as good-night. I am going down to Evesleigh to-morrow to see after some matters. I don't fancy, after all, Mrs. Ruthven will take the place, she has made so many difficulties and stipulations."

"How long will you be away?" asked Nora, who had grown very silent of late.

"Well, quite three or four days. You will write to me, will you not, my sweetest sweetheart?"

"Yes, certainly."

"And will you take a parcel for me to Brookdale?" asked Mrs. L'Estrange. "I'll go and fetch it."

"With pleasure," said Marsden. "Now, dearest," he cried, as soon as as they were alone, "one farewell kiss. I have an odd sort of fancy that this may be the last you'll ever give me. It is extremely absurd this superstition, and must mean I am going to die, for if I live I shall undoubtedly have many a sweet kiss in

"Mark Winton was very fond of you?"

"Well," returned Mrs. L'Estrange with a quiet smile, "he fancied I was—he said he was—and I, a foolish, motherless girl, believed him."

"But was he not faithful and true?" cried Nora, infinitely surprised.

"There might have been a mistal somewhere; but it all came har enough on me," returned Mrs. L'Estrange. "There was a gentleman in our neighborhood who wished to marry him—a very good fellow I was inclined to like him, but after Mark made me believe he loved me I thought of no one else, and I refused my first admirer. Then Mark went away to India. He wrote to me once or twice. Then came my great sorrow. My father died, leaving barely sufficient to pay his debts. I was very friendly, we had live away from all our relations, and waited and waited for a letter from Mark, but none came for more than a year. Then I had a curious epistol bidding me farewell, and expressing deep regret for any pain he might have caused me, but that marriage was out of the question for him. I never replied. I felt that chapter was closed forever. That was just after I went to live with Miss Welster—an engagement Mrs. Atherton got for me."

"I could never have believed that such a man as Mr. Winton would have acted so basely," exclaimed Nora, her heart beating, her eyes lit up with indignation. How can you—"

"But, Nora," interrupted Mrs. L'Estrange, quickly, "it was not Red Mark, whom you know, who heaved in this way! I do not fancy he ever was in love in his life. Oh no! It was his cousin. Our friend was always true and steady. I will remember when, owing to the similarity of name, some knowledge of his cousin's engagement to me reached him, he warned me against throwing away a certainty for a will-o-the-wisp, as, no doubt, I did. Ah that was a dreadful time. Its bitterness and mortification sting to still! My life, under its new conditions was dreary and trying enough to make me very grateful to your father for giving me the chance of leaving it—and you know the rest."

"Then—" Nora paused, and, changing her sentence, observed, "Do you know, I fancied, at one time, that you would marry Mr. Winton?"

Mrs. L'Estrange laughed softly.

"That is curious," she said, "for I fancied that you and he were talking to each other, until after the Evesleigh ball—when a sort of change came to both of you."

There was a pause of a few minutes. The light died out of Nora's eyes—the color from her cheek. A length she said:

"Then you would not marry Mr. Winton?"

"It is extremely unlikely that I would ask me," said Mrs. L'Estrange, laughing. "And as to me all ideas of love or matrimony are over forever. Bea is, and will be my only love. I want no more."

A dull sense of despair numbed Nora's heart; it was a few seconds before she could collect herself to say:

"Do you think Clifford Marsden knew all this?"

"Yes; I imagine he did. He was very friendly with Mark, and continued to be after our friend, Red Mark, went out to India. My fiancé as I fancied him to be, did not get till after. He was appointed to a regiment stationed at Delhi, and, believe, was very unfortunate and weak. Mr. Winton gave me an account of his later life. He died two years ago. I had not heard anything of him for a long time, and

"Do not think of such things, Clifford," said Nora, more touched by his words than he was aware, and he leaned forward to press her lips gently to his cheek. "I trust you may have many, many happy years before you."

"Will you make me happy?" "I will do my best for you, dear Clifford. I will, indeed." "God bless you darling!" kissing her hair, her brow, her cheek quickly and passionately, and letting her go. Mrs. L'Estrange re-entered the room.

"It is not very large, and if you will send it over to the cook at the cookhouse, I shall be much obliged," she said, handing the packet to him. After a few more words, Marsden left them adieu and departed. Mrs. L'Estrange and her step-daughter drew nearer the fire, and sat for some minutes in silence.

"I did not think Mr. Marsden as light as usual," said the former at length. "No. He was a little more serious than usual," returned Nora. "But he is always pleasant and kind. I really think, dear Nora, you are wonderfully fortunate. Yours is the case where true love has run its course."

"The ideas of March have come, not me."

"That is quite an uncanny speech, Nora." There was another pause. Then Nora, gathering up her resolution, said quietly:

"No. More the friend of the other Mark. You know both the Wintons of the same name, it used to make confusion. They had not been brought up exactly together. They were at different schools, but both were sent to study with my father—

"Well," returned Mrs. L'Estrange, with a quiet smile, "he fancied me. He said he was—and I, a foolish, motherless girl, believed him."

"But was he not faithful and devoted?" cried Nora, infinitely surprised.

"There might have been a mistake somewhere; but it all came hard upon me," returned Mrs. L'Estrange. "There was a gentleman in our neighborhood who wished me to marry him—a very good fellow. I was inclined to like him, but after he made me believe he loved me, I thought of no one else, and I re-was so grieved to think of his wasted life! How well it is that the future is hidden from us! There, dear, is the whole history."

The whole history! Mrs. L'Estrange little dreamed what a sting it left in her step-daughter's soul. Was Clifford Marsden's memory really defective? Or, had he misrepresented facts? Surely he was too much a gentleman to do so? At any rate, she (Nora), had been juggled out of the best chance of happiness ever offered her; for she now felt convinced Mark Winton had loved her from the first.

"Dear Helen," she said, rising with an effort, "I have kept you up too late; let us go to bed. What an extraordinary jumble life is!"

"Yes! Is it not incomprehensible?" returned Mrs. L'Estrange, kissing her. You look dreadfully pale and tired, Nora."

"Incomprehensible!" the word kept repeating itself in fiery syllables all night long; strive as she would, Nora could hear nothing else, think of nothing else. What an incomprehensible destiny that which doomed her and the man that loved her well, as she now believed, to separation forever!

Was she deceived, or only inadvertently misled? If deceived she would never, never forgive. And she must find out.

CHAPTER XIV.

The balmy air of Torquay did wonders for Mrs. Ruthven, and her own resolute eagerness to regain health and strength still more.

The attentions and inquiries of various noble and distinguished invalids, sojourning, like herself, in that famous resort, soothed and satisfied her. Lady Dorrington had written glowing eulogiums and recommendations of her friend and guest, and all things promised fair for the ensuing spring campaign. But though sweet and placid to those few favored visitors who were admitted to her presence, the real vivifying influence which was bringing back energy to her system was the hope, the prospect of revenge. To lose Clifford Marsden, by whom she had been so fascinated, was bad enough; to lose the lord of Evesleigh, the hero of a hundred conquests, was worse; to lose him to a simple, inexperienced girl, whom she had herself praised and patronized, was worst of all.

Already society had begun to talk of Clifford Marsden being about to marry some country nobody; but as yet there was no certainty in the report, and, deep in her heart, Mrs. Ruthven swore the marriage should never take place.

It was part of her scheme to prevent Evesleigh from going into strange hands, even for a season. She was determined to rule there herself. Captain Shirley's visit was a stimulating tonic; but she was not too confidential with her right-hand man.

She listened to his accounts of Marsden's devotion to Nora, the steadiness and sobriety of his life in consequence, of the early date fixed for their marriage, the rumors that he intended to settle all he possibly could upon his bride elect, etc., etc., to all of which Mrs. Ruthven listened almost in silence, with down cast eyes, inscrutable smile.

In vain, Shirley tried to draw some observations from her, which might indicate in what direction the current of her feelings was setting. He could not even make up his mind if she had resolved to renounce Marsden. The only sentence which escaped her lips on the subject was when Shirley reiterated the report that the marriage was to take place immediately; then Mrs. Ruthven said, languidly:

"Of thing, but she is the most inaccessible woman I ever came across." "Shirley, you are a fool! A young creature fresh from the school-room and educational iron, is the easiest game of all! Man, have you so little experience as not to know you can always count on at least one traitor within the trenches?"

"Perhaps the game was not sufficiently exciting; anyhow, Winton did not give a fellow much chance."

"Winton! yes, that is a man I should enjoy mortifying. I think he was fond of Nora L'Estrange, and I suspect she liked him. But who would refuse Marsden of Evesleigh?"

"He is not so great a catch."

"Listen to me," cried Mrs. Ruthven, not heeding him. "I want to go to London—let me see—I think I could bear the journey next week. I want you to take rooms for me at the Alexandria Hotel; I shall keep them for awhile. I like this place, and can go up to town as I like. You must secure good rooms, and have everything made comfortable and warm—above all things, warm."

Captain Shirley took her directions with profound attention, and then their talk flowed in ordinary channels. Mrs. Ruthven was quiet, and in rather a more cheerful mood; she was more civil and friendly than usual. Yet Shirley left her with an odd impression that there was danger in the air.

The short absence which Marsden contemplated, unavoidably extended itself to nearly a week.

This, which would otherwise have been a welcome period of repose to Nora, was robbed of its restfulness by her brooding over her step-mother's communication. It was like fighting the air, this constant routing of phantom doubts, which dispersed only to reassemble in palpable battalions, while the question, did Marsden knowingly deceive her? remained unsolved. She determined to ask him. She would not again permit herself to be blinded with some half truth. She was more uneasy than she would admit; she could not apply herself to anything, and she even incurred a gentle rebuke from her step-mother, for her indiscretion respecting some of her preparations, which Mrs. L'Estrange complained caused unnecessary delay.

The day before Marsden rejoined them, the post brought Mrs. L'Estrange two letters of some importance to this true history. The first she opened was from Winton. It was written in a depressed though friendly tone, and gave some particulars respecting his uncle's death, and the amount of property bequeathed by deceased. There was, he said, a good deal of business to be settled. His uncle's only daughter was dead, but he found she had left a son in different circumstances; and Winton went on to say, that he felt it his duty to divide the bequest with this boy, whose guardian he would undertake to be; finally he expected to be in town after Christmas, when he would have the pleasure of calling on Mrs. L'Estrange.

"I am sure Mark Winton does not write like a man who had inherited money," she said, when she had finished the letter; "and I don't suppose he is inconsolable for the loss of his uncle—they did not love each other much in old times."

"Dear Helen, do read this letter," interrupted Nora; "it is, I see, from Lady Dorrington. I know it will be unpleasant, but do not try to hide anything from me."

"It looks formidable," said Mrs. L'Estrange, "perhaps you had better read it with me." Nora came behind her step-mother, and read as follows:

"Dear Mrs. L'Estrange,—I address

vanity in the first place, I believe, to interfere, by getting up a foolish flirtation with her cousin, and drawing him on in the most deliberate manner, and with your knowledge, till my brother—the most reckless of men—was fully committed, and is now unable to extricate himself. Had Nora any true sense of honor and duty, she would have checked Clifford, have consulted me, have done anything rather than drag us all into a position of such difficulty and disgrace, for I see that Mrs. Ruthven is determined to take some steps, which will, no doubt, cover us with confusion.

"I shall only add, that if you and Miss L'Estrange think for a moment her union with Clifford Marsden will secure her happiness, you are profoundly mistaken. He will never make a good husband to any one; he will never be true to any woman. Mrs. Ruthven knows the world, she knows men; she could and comfort in the substantial advantages of her position; but Nora, if at all the girl I believed her to be, would fret herself to death. However, I am probably giving her credit for more feeling than she possesses. Young and old seem alike indurated by the greed for material things, which grasps at wealth and luxury by any means, however unworthy. She may accomplish this marriage, but she will never be acknowledged as a sister-in-law by

"I. DORRINGTON."

Nora, white as a sheet, took the offensive letter and re-perused it in silence.

"Lady Dorrington must have been out of her mind when she wrote that," cried Mrs. L'Estrange indignantly. "She little knows the true state of the case."

"It is very cruel and unjust," said Nora, in low, unsteady tones. "It is too bad to be accused of dishonorable scheming to win a man from whom I would give the world to be free."

"My dear Nora, do not allow your anger against Lady Dorrington to make you unjust to poor Clifford," exclaimed Mrs. L'Estrange, startled by the suppressed passion in her voice. "There is no reason to doubt him."

Well," returned Mrs. L'Estrange, with a quiet smile, "he fancied he—she said he was—and I, a foolish, motherless girl, believed him." "But was he not faithful and so?" cried Nora, infinitely surprised.

"There might have been a mistake somewhere; but it all came hard enough on me," returned Mrs. L'Estrange. "There was a gentleman in our neighborhood who wished me to marry him—a very good fellow, was inclined to like him, but after Mr. Marsden made me believe he loved me, I thought of no one else, and I loved my first admirer. "I could never have believed that a man as Mr. Winton would have acted so basely," exclaimed Nora, her heart beating, her eyes lit with indignation. How can you be so sure?"

"But, Nora," interrupted Mrs. L'Estrange, quickly, "it was not Mark, whom you know, who behaved in this way! I do not fancy ever was in love in his life. Oh, it was his cousin. "There was a pause of a few minutes. The light died out of Nora's face—the color from her cheek. At length she said: 'Then you would not marry Mr. Winton?'"

"It is extremely unlikely that he would ask me," said Mrs. L'Estrange, laughing. "And as to me, ideas of love or matrimony are far from me. He is, and will be, only love. I want no more." "A dull sense of despair numbed Nora's heart; it was a few seconds before she could collect herself to say: 'Do you think Clifford Marsden would do this?'"

"Yes, I imagine he did. He was very friendly with Mark, and consented to be after our friend, Red Mark, went out to India. My fiancé, I fancied him to be, did not go after. He was appointed to a regiment stationed at Delhi, and, I believe, was very unfortunate and died. Mr. Winton gave me an account of his later life. He died two years ago. I had not heard anything of him for a long time, and I elect, etc., etc., to all of which Mrs. Ruthven listened almost in silence, with down cast eyes, inscrutable smile.

In vain, Shirley tried to draw some observations from her, which might indicate in what direction the current of her feelings was setting. He could not even make up his mind if she had resolved to renounce Marsden. The only sentence which escaped her lips on the subject was when Shirley reiterated the report that the marriage was to take place immediately; then Mrs. Ruthven said, languidly:

"If it does not take place soon it will probably not take place at all."

"May I ask your reason for saying so?"

"Well, chiefly because Mr. Marsden is not a man of very fixed purpose—and—something may occur to change his views. Talking of change, did I tell you that I have got rid of that place at Twickenham? It seems that a rich stock-broker took a violent fancy to it, and he has given me a thousand pounds for my bargain."

"Did you tire of it so soon?" asked Shirley, in surprise.

"Yes; sickness and seclusion have wrought a radical change in me. I now feel I must be in London and in the complete country, alternately."

"I am afraid, Mrs. Ruthven, that I have unconsciously done something, or left undone something, that has induced you to withdraw the confidence you once placed in me," said Shirley, with a wounded air, looking straight into her eyes.

"Then you are mistaken: I give you exactly the same amount of confidence I always did—a good deal, but by no means all. You have been useful to me, and I have been useful to you. I am still disposed to be your friend, but do not suppose you have the smallest power to injure me. The day is long gone by for that."

"Injured you! Do you suppose that such an idea ever crossed my brain? My inclination is only to be your most devoted servant—more, if you would accept me!"

Mrs. Ruthven laughed softly. "I quite believe you," she said; "still—"

"You have never been quite the same since you were robbed of your rubies," he interrupted. "You seem to have grown doubtful of every one."

"I am," she exclaimed with sudden fire. "Utterly, completely distrustful; and you mutter feeble complaints because I will not tell you the vague hope I have of recovering them. Leave that alone; I may confide even that to you one day, but never if I find you presuming to try discovery on your own account. I alone have a slight clue, and I will have no one meddle."

Shirley looked at her so completely startled and surprised that she laughed a strange, almost hysterical, laugh.

"You must not excite yourself," he exclaimed; "you might bring on another relapse."

"That would never do," she returned in an altered voice. "I want to be well soon; I have a good deal to do. Tell me, Shirley," she went on, "why did you not make love to Nora L'Estrange? She would have been a suitable wife for you."

"I was quite willing to do so, but somehow it was impossible. I could never get beyond the weather, or the last new waltz, with her."

"What is there different in her from other women?" she asked scornfully; "you have been tolerably successful with other women."

"I don't know; Miss L'Estrange is frank and pleasant, and all that sort of thing. I don't know the true state of the case."

"It is very cruel and unjust," said Nora, in low, unsteady tones. "It is too bad to be accused of dishonorable scheming to win a man from whom I would give the world to be free."

"My dear Nora, do not allow your anger against Lady Dorrington to make you unjust to poor Clifford," exclaimed Mrs. L'Estrange, startled by the suppressed passion in her voice. "There is no reason to doubt him."

"It is neither doubt nor anger, Helen. I am averse to marry Mr. Marsden. It was instinct at first—it is—I don't know what it is now."

"My dear child, this is dreadful! I never anticipated anything half so bad," said Mrs. L'Estrange, aghast at this revelation. "What can you do? You can not break with him now, and yet to marry with such a feeling is horrible. What can you do?"

"I don't know," Nora's lip trembled as she spoke. "I seem acting badly and falsely. I am so sorry for Clifford, he deserves better treatment from me. I will show him this letter. I will point out the folly of marrying me. Why did he ever take a fancy to me."

One by one the bugbears of housekeeping are being put to rout through the instrumentality of gas. The modern kitchen—which means the all-gas kitchen—is now a recognized part of the up-to-date home. The all-gas kitchen lightens labor. It means a clean, wholesome, sanitary kitchen, as there is no coal dust or ashes to be spread around, and it becomes a real pleasure to work in it. Every housewife desires to cook and heat water in the most economical way, in the quickest, most dependable way, with the least possible work.

up will not hurt them. Rooted in the rich hills, they can easily give odds to anything growing in poor soil. When plowing is no longer possible a little hoe work and hand weeding may be in order, but take care neither to bruise the vines nor to throw loose dirt upon the leaves.

Unless there is a ready market close at hand get the brine barrel ready as soon as the first flowers appear. It must be clean and sweet before the brine goes in. Old pork and fish barrels always taint their later contents. Empty whisky barrels or molasses barrels do excellently, but should be well painted outside with red lead to prevent the ravages of wood worms. Make the brine of soft water and clean salt, strong enough to float an egg. A little brown sugar or molasses improves the keeping quality. Bring it to a boil and skim clean after everything is dissolved. Pour it into the barrel boiling hot, let stand a day and skim again before putting in pickles.

The net result is nearly the same, whether the pickles are cut small or at full length. Decide in the beginning which size it shall be and stick to the decision. Cut the pickles every morning while the dew is on. Thus they are plump and cool, in the best condition for keeping. Use very sharp shears for clipping and take care to leave the least bit of stalk to each pickle, but never to wound, bruise or break the vine. If by accident a vine is bruised or torn, cut it off remorselessly, so it shall not decay and set up disease in the whole plant. Be careful not to bruise the pickles. In washing use plenty of water and drain them well before putting them into the brine. Keep a weighted wooden cover floating on top of the brine, thus insuring that the pickles shall stay covered. Put only sort and size of pickle into a vessel. If saving various sorts use brine crocks instead of a barrel, thus making separation easy.

Pickles worth eating are worth also a fair price, and the producer should be satisfied with nothing less. Take account here of individual taste. Hearty laborers relish big, salt, green cucumbers, but sniff disdain of fancy relishes and unwonted tangs or mixed flavors, such as the mangoes and piccalilli, whose appeal to educated palates is irresistible.

If the soil of the pickle garden is thin it had better be devoted to cucumbers. The long green variety is best. It can be cut at little finger length or left until almost full grown and still be marketable. Have the ground made light and fine; then mark it out accurately in squares eight feet each way. Where the square lines cross dig holes three feet across and at least three feet deep. Put in the bottom of them two inches of brickbats or broken stones or dry corn-cobs, over that a foot of stable manure packed solid; then fill up level with rich earth. One-third good loam, one-third leaf mold and one-third rotted manure is a good combination. Make the holes and fill them in May. Plant a dozen seed in each, sticking them down an inch or so apart. When they sprout let them stand for a fortnight; then pull up all but three, leaving those most vigorous and healthy looking.

PASTURING ALFALFA.

It is poor policy to pasture alfalfa with horses or sheep, because they graze closely and injure the crown of the plant, says the Orange Judd Farmer. Never pasture it until it has been established for at least a year. It should never be pastured so closely that it will not be possible to take the equivalent of two cuttings of hay during the entire season. After clipping never pasture for at least a week. Some farmers divide their fields into sections and pasture a part at one time.

POINTS THAT SHOW DAIRY FORM IN COWS

A knowledge of dairy type or form is of great value in selecting good cows, but, like pedigree, it cannot be entirely relied upon. Records of actual production are of far greater value. Selection and breeding for a definite type may seriously interfere with production. The following are some of the essential points in a cow of good dairy type, and the key word to all of them is productive capacity:

If a cow is to digest and use large quantities of food she must have a well developed digestive system. This is indicated by a large, wide mouth; long, strong jaws and a large body. The body should be long, wide and deep, giving room for a large amount of food.

The digested food is carried to the udder by the circulatory system, which should be well developed. This is indicated by large "milk veins," "milk wells," veins showing plainly on the udder and body, and by a healthy, "sappy" condition of the animal.

The udder should be well developed, because it consists of the glands which

The Holstein is naturally a large cow with a large capacity, therefore not so susceptible to indigestion and other ailments of like nature due to inexperienced feeding as most of the other breeds. Holsteins are such large, wholesome cattle that they are also less susceptible to disease and invariably, if properly cared for before parturition, will give birth to a large, healthy calf, which also is practically immune from the usual calf disorders. The Holstein cow shown is a fine type of the breed.

take the materials brought to them and change these materials into milk. The udder should be wide and deep and should extend well to the front and rear. When empty, the udder should be soft and pliable rather than fleshy. A fleshy udder usually indicates that too much gland space is taken up by fat. It should be cut up between the quarters. The teats should be of good size and placed well out on the quarters.

Through the lungs the blood throws off waste product and takes oxygen to the body. A large blood supply requires large lungs to carry on the work. Large lungs are indicated by large nostrils and wide chest.

Nervous temperament is no less important and is indicated by a large, clear eye, a well developed head, broad between the eyes, and a long straight back and tail.

Capacity to produce is also indicated by well developed maternal functions. This is indicated by a large udder, long, strong loins; long, broad pelvis, and well developed reproductive organs.—Ohio Experiment Station Bulletin.

BORAX AND HOUSEFLIES

A Method For Preventing Flies From Breeding in Horse Manure.

[Prepared by United States department of agriculture.]

As a result of experiments the specialists of the department of agriculture have discovered that a small amount of ordinary borax sprinkled daily on manure will effectively prevent the breeding of the typhoid housefly. Similarly the same substance applied to garbage, refuse, open toilet damp floors and crevices in stables, cellars or markets will prevent flies from hatching. Borax will not kill adult fly nor prevent it from laying eggs, but its thorough use will prevent any further breeding.

The investigation, which included experiments with many substances, undertaken to discover some means of preventing the breeding of flies from horse manure without lessening the value of this manure as a fertilizer use by the farmer. It was felt that some means of preventing the breeding of flies near a human habitation could be devised the diseases spread by the filthy germ carriers could be greatly reduced. While the "swat the fly campaign," traps and other devices for reducing the number of typhoid carry flies are of value, they are of less importance than the prevention of breeding. It was realized, however, that no measure for preventing breeding of flies would come into common use unless it was such that the farmer could use it on his manure without destroying its usefulness for growing plants and without introducing into the soil any substance that would interfere with his crops.

As a result of experiments carried on at the Arlington farm in Virginia and New Orleans, La., the investigators found that 0.62 of a pound of borax or 0.75 of a pound of calcium borate (crude calcium borate) would kill the maggots and prevent practically all of the flies from breeding in eight bushels of horse manure from developing. This was proved by placing manure in cages, comparing the results from piles treated with borax and from untreated piles. The borax, it was found, killed the fly eggs and maggots in the manure and prevented their growth into flies.

In the case of garbage cans or refuse piles, two ounces of borax or calcium borate, costing from 5 cents a pound upward, according to the quantity which is purchased, will effectively prevent flies from breeding.

In feeding to hogs garbage that contains borax care is also recommended especially when the animals are being fattened for market. Borax is not a very poisonous substance, and feeding of garbage that contains it to hogs is not likely to be a serious matter. On the other hand, borax in large quantities does produce gastric disturbances, and for this reason a certain amount of care is advisable.

The method for using this substance in the case of stables is to sprinkle the borax or calcium borate in the quarters given above by means of a flat sifter or other fine sieve around the outer edges of the pile of horse manure. The manure should then be sprinkled immediately with two or three gallons of water to eight bushels of manure. It is essential, however, broken stones or dry corncocks, over that a foot of stable manure packed solid; then fill up level with rich earth. One-third good loam, one-third leaf mold and one-third rotted manure is a good combination. Make the holes and fill them in May. Plant a dozen seed in each, sticking them down an inch or so apart. When they sprout let them stand for a fortnight; then pull up all but three, leaving those most vigorous and healthy looking.

To prevent bugs, which suck the life from young vines, have bottomless boxes six inches high and eighteen inches square. Paint the wood over with coal tar or even kerosene; then tack over one end a square of cheesecloth. Set a cloth covered box over each hill as soon as the seed are up, or before it, if there are cold, drying winds. The bugs will not stay underneath the cloth, and the vines there will grow so fast as to be out of danger in a fortnight. The boxes can be kept from season to season and are invaluable for cucumbers, melons, squashes or anything of that sort.

Keep the hills light and clean; also the whole space between them. Plows can run between the hills until the vines begin to spread. Once they fairly cover the earth what grass comes

WEANING THE LAMBS.

Too Long a Suckling Period Is a Tax on the Ewes.

Four months ought to be long enough to allow a lamb to run with ewe. If it has been fed or taught to eat during this four months the lamb will just about wean itself at the end of this period. When it fails to do so the ewe will sometimes attend to the weaning.

Most farmers with a few head of sheep pay very little attention to lamb weaning. This usually works out all right, as the ewes will compel the lambs to shift for themselves in most instances. They instinctively shut off the milk supply, and it is up to the lamb to make his own living on the pasture.

Where a lamb is permitted to suck as long as he desires it usually works a hardship on the ewes. While the lambs may gain a little more than if they were being fed at proper intervals and allowed to run on the pasture the gain is not proportionate to the drain it makes upon the ewe.

Where a ewe is permitted to suckle her lamb till very late in the season she will be a slow breeder. She will not come into heat very early, as she must recuperate somewhat from the strain of suckling. It is also unfair in that it makes her breed late, and she is not in the best condition to produce her next lamb. Early weaning means a long resting period for the ewe, and that is just what she should have.

Feeding Grain to Horses.

Don't feed dirty grain to horses. The dust, weed seeds and other foreign matter in the grain are disagreeable to the animals and are injurious. Use a sieve to measure the grain, and give it a few shakes to allow the dirt and seeds to fall out before feeding. Some pour water over the grain in the sieve or dip the sieve of grain in a bucket or tub of water a few times. This is a good plan, as it removes all dust and smut. The feed boxes are kept cleaner by treating the grain in this way before feeding.—Better Farming.

It is essential, however, to sprinkle a little of the borax on the manure as it is added daily to the pile instead of waiting until a full pile obtained, because this will prevent eggs which the flies lay on fresh manure from hatching. As the fly maggots congregate at the outer edge of the manure pile most of the borax should be sprinkled there.

ORCHARD AND GARDEN HINT

The bruise of an apple may not once develop into rot, but will make a brown spot which disfigures and lessens the value of the fruit.

Many farmers who have been growing fruit for years do not know that the apple and most other fruit tree form fruit buds in the late summer months.

Apples keep best when allowed to hang on the trees until they reach maturity, but that does not mean soft or ripe. It is a common fallacy that green, immature fruit will keep the best.

Good Roads Improve Social Conditions

NO matter what your station in life or where you live, a certain amount of your time must be spent in pleasure to make life worth the living, and to obtain that pleasure you go to town or to your neighbors—especially is this true when living in the country.

Good Roads enable you to get into town or to your neighbors quicker, more often and without you or your horses or vehicles being covered with mud, and without regard to weather conditions or season. They enable your family physician to get to you quickly in times of illness. They enable your children to "foot it" to school every school-day. They keep your boys and girls on the farm by giving them better conditions generally.

Concrete Roads

are "every-day" roads—they have no "closed season" because they are open to traffic every day in the year. They are the most economical roads because they reduce the cost of maintenance to the minimum. They are easy of traction, clean, hard and free of ruts and holes. They keep your road money out of the mud.

The Disappearing Coin.

To make a quarter disappear from a glass of water after hearing it drop is a very puzzling trick. The articles necessary to perform this trick are a glass of water, a handkerchief, a quarter and a piece of clear glass the exact size of a quarter.

To perform this trick advance with the piece of glass hidden between the second and third fingers of the left hand and holding the quarter in plain sight between the thumb and first finger of the same hand and the handkerchief in the right hand. Throw the handkerchief over the left hand and gather up the glass piece in the fold of the cloth, allowing the coin to drop into the palm of the left hand while covered. Remove the left hand and hold out the piece of glass with the handkerchief drawn tightly around it. Any one can touch the cloth covered glass, but it cannot be distinguished from the quarter. While this is being shown slip the quarter into a pocket.

To fill up the "saltcellars" and soften hard outlines of neck and chest try deep breathing.

TIME SAVERS.

Simple Devices That Will Simplify the Summer's Work.

There are simple devices that will be required for the easiest handling of the summer fruits and vegetables. Among these may be mentioned asparagus clamps, berry hullers and pineapple snips.

Berry hullers can be bought for a nickel apiece in some shops, and one of these little, tongue-like implements will not only save considerable time during the berry season, but will prevent stained fingers and much scrubbing to remove stains.

Pineapple snips, which are made like scissors, but have blades especially designed to cut out the pineapple eyes, cost 25 cents. A pair will last for years if one takes pains to prevent rust accumulation. There is a knack in using this inexpensive appliance which one very quickly learns.

It may not be amiss to suggest that when several "pines" are cut up at once it is well to save the parings and the snipped end eyes (the fruit having first been washed with a brush), since a well flavored sirup can be made therefrom. This sirup can be used for sauces, in ices and sponges, or it can be bottled for use next winter as a flavoring extract.

Asparagus clamps come in two sizes. They consist of two semicircular pieces of perforated tin, held together in circular form and designed to clasp around a bunch of asparagus and to hold it while cooking. The halves can be pressed open by means of the spring. When the asparagus is cooked the clamps let it drop out easily without breaking.

A different kind of asparagus cooker is a perforated tray having sides, but no end pieces, which rests inside a long, narrow cooking pan. The object of both these designs is to prevent the asparagus from getting broken and so looking ragged and carelessly dressed.

A kitchen device which will be found very convenient during the berry season is a wire draining basket. Now that housekeepers are so universally awake to the necessity of carefully washing all fruit there are few women who would think of putting unwashed berries on the table. To wash them in an ordinary bowl or dish is not satisfactory, and nothing seems quite so good for this purpose as the wire basket.

The Mocking Bird Made $3,000,000 For Publishers.

The death of "Stephen Adams," in private life Michael Maybrick, composer of such world-famous ballad songs as "A Warrior Bold," "Nancy Lee," "The Midshipmite," "The Star of Bethlehem," "The Holy City," "They All Love Jack" and "Thora," reminds one that, unlike many other composers of popular songs, who have usually sold their compositions outright instead of on the royalty basis, he must have made a good sum from his music.

It is true that he sold "A Warrior Bold" for a dollar, a song that produced royalties for its lucky purchaser that ran into four figures, and he also offered "Nancy Lee" to a publisher for $100. This, however, was refused, but after hearing Stephen Adams sing it at St. James Hall the publisher offered $500. This time the composer refused, and the song, which the publisher might have had for $100, ultimately cost him several thousands in royalties.

But it is doubtful if Maybrick received as much for any of his songs as the $200,000 which the universally popular Queen of My Heart earned for its composer. Sir Arthur Sullivan drew $50,000 in royalties from "The manures does produce gastric disturbances, and for this reason a certain amount of care is advisable. The method for using this substance in the case of stables is to sprinkle the borax or colemanite in the quantities given above by means of a flour sifter or other fine sieve around the outer edges of the pile of horse manure. The manure should then be sprinkled immediately with two or three gallons of water to eight bushels of manure. It is essential, however, to sprinkle a little of the borax on the manure as it is added daily to the pile instead of waiting until a full pile is obtained, because this will prevent the eggs which the flies lay on fresh manure from hatching. As the fly maggots congregate at the outer edge of the manure pile most of the borax could be sprinkled there.

ORCHARD AND GARDEN HINTS.

The bruise of an apple may not at once develop into rot, but will make a brown spot which disfigures and lessens the value of the fruit.

Many farmers who have been growing fruit for years do not know that an apple and most other fruit trees form fruit buds in the late summer months.

Apples keep best when allowed to hang on the trees until they reach maturity, but that does not mean soft and juicy. It is a common fallacy that green, immature fruit will keep the best.

Promptly gather up and burn all rubbish and rubbish in the orchard. Any time in the year is the right time to begin planning for an asparagus plot.

Remember that the wood ashes are the best kind of fertilizer for the orchard, lawn or garden.

Delery delights in a low, rich, heavy, moist soil and is usually grown upon the same land year after year.

Beg. borrow or buy all the wood ashes you can to use in the garden. Work them well into the soil.

Save every bit of the hen manure. Keep it dry and put it on some crop next spring. Worth its weight in gold.

of the same hand and the handkerchief in the right hand. Throw the handkerchief over the left hand and gather up the glass piece in the fold of the cloth, allowing the coin to drop into the palm of the left hand while covered. Remove the left hand and hold out the piece of glass with the handkerchief drawn tightly around it. Any one can touch the cloth covered glass, but it cannot be distinguished from the quarter. While this is being shown slip the quarter into a pocket. Spread the handkerchief over the glass of water and allow the glass disk to drop. A distinct click will be heard when it strikes the bottom. Raise the handkerchief, and nothing will be seen, as the glass will not be visible in the water.

Why does a fat man when squeezed compliment the ladies? Because the pressure makes him flatter.

What quadrupeds are admitted to balls, operas and dinner parties? White kids.

Why does a sculptor resemble a tippler? Because he is everlastingly soaking his clay.

What instrument of war does an angry lover resemble? A cross bow (beau).

Why are cats like unskillful surgeons? Because they mew-till-late and destroy patients (patience).

Why are gymnastics like the tide at low water? Because they develop the muscles (mussels).

About Earth and Sea.

The volume of the saline matter in the ocean is a little more than 4,800,000 cubic miles, or enough to cover the entire surface of the United States, exclusive of Alaska, 1.6 miles deep.

The volume of the ten mile rocky crust of the earth, including the mean elevation of the land above the sea, is 1,633,000,000 cubic miles.

One per cent of the contents of the oceans would cover all the land areas of the globe to a depth of 290 feet.-United States Geological Survey.

Cut to the Quick.

In this phrase "quick" is a substantive meaning vital part and is derived from the Anglo-Saxon "cwic," meaning "living."

The expression signifies literally "hurt in a vital part" and is used to denote acute distress of mind caused by unkindness in word or act.

A Joke.

Small Johnny's father said that he considered that most boys were little firecrackers-they are so filled up with noise.

But Johnny said his pa was wrong; that he had always found himself more like a pinwheel that is always whizzing round.

Jollying Him.

"What did she say?" inquired the fiancé.

"She said you had thoughtful eyes, a firm mouth and a noble brow."

very convenient during the berry season is a wire draining basket. Now that housekeepers are so universally awake to the necessity of carefully washing all fruit there are few women who would think of putting unwashed berries on the table. To wash them in an ordinary bowl or dish is not satisfactory, and nothing seems quite so good for this purpose as the wire basket.

way. The straps and skirt do not soil so quickly as the white of the waist. Illustrated here is a pretty frock of this kind suitable for the small girl of about ten years of age. It is carried out in green linen, with the waist in white linen.

Freshening Rolls.

If you have biscuits or rolls left from one day to the next and want to warm them up place in a pan and cover tightly. Two pans the same size do beautifully. They can then be placed in a hot oven for a few minutes, just long enough to heat them thoroughly, and when taken out they will be like fresh baked ones, much more delicious than when dampened before putting into the oven.

Pie Plates.

The housekeeper who bakes pies and then puts them in rows on the shelf or in the pantry for future use should not use a tin pie plate. No matter how clean the plate has been scoured before using the tin will be likely to rust and there will be rust spots on the pie itself. Instead, use earthenware pie plates.

also offered "Nancy Lee" to a publisher for $100. This, however, was refused, but after hearing Stephen Adams sing it at St. James Hall the publisher offered $500. This time the composer refused, and the song, which the publisher might have had for $100, ultimately cost him several thousands in royalties.

But it is doubtful if Maybrick received as much for any of his songs as the $200,000 which the universally popular Queen of My Heart earned for its composer. Sir Arthur Sullivan drew $50,000 in royalties from "The Lost Chord," while "In Old Madrid" rewarded composer and publisher to the tune of $75,000. "My Pretty Jane" is said to have yielded a revenue of $10,000 a line, and even after many years of popularity some old favorite songs are worth a substantial sum, for not long ago the copyright of "For All Eternity" was sold for $11,000.

"For All Eternity" was refused by several publishers before a well-known firm agreed to undertake to publish it, while all that the composer of "Listen to the Mocking Bird," by which the publishers are said to have realized $3,000,000, received for the song was $35.

"Alice, Where Art Thou?" was offered to several publishers for $25, and declined with thanks, while "Kathleen Mavourneen" was actually parted with for this absurd sum. Who can estimate the golden harvest that has been reaped from these two songs, which won wide popularity and undying fame? And the same might be said of Balfe's exquisite "Come Into the Garden, Maud," sold by the composer for $500, and of "Cheer Boys, Cheer," sold by Henry Russell for $15.

Still In Doubt.

Two farmers met in a western town a day or two after a cyclone had visited that particular neighborhood.

"She shook things up pretty bad out at my place," said one, stroking his whiskers meditatively. "By the way, Hi," he added, "that new barn o' yours hurt any?"

"Wall," drawled the other, "I dunno; I haven't found it yet."

Breaking It Gently.

"I understand, sir, that you are the possessor of a swollen fortune."

"Well," gruffly answered the beautiful girl's father, "what is that to you?"

"I merely thought that I would give you due notice of my intention to help take the swelling out of it. Myrtle and I are going to be married."

Birds and Birds.

"What was that you called me?" she asked.

"I said you was an old pelican," he replied.

"There was a time when you thought I was a paragon."

"Yes, but that was before I knew much about them kind of birds."

C. N. R. Train Wrecked.

A serious accident occurred on Friday last at 10.30 a.m., on the B. of Q.
Railway, a branch of the C. N. R.,
which runs from Deseronto to Ban-nockburn. When train No. 79, with Engineer McKenna and Conductor
Whiting in charge, was about three miles north of Tamworth, in some manner the coach and baggage car left the track. Conductor Whiting says it was from the spreading of rails. The coach and baggage car turned turtle in the ditch, and about ten passengers were hurt. Those seriously hurt were: P. R. Purcell,
Fish and Game Inspector for North Addington, and Mrs. Derbyshire of Burgessville. Mr. Purcell was thrown across the coach, striking his shoulder on the opposite seats, breaking his collarbone and hurting his back badly.
Dr. Burrows, summoned from Marl-bank, said he had a poor chance for recovery, as his heart was very weak and his age was also against him, being over seventy years of age. Mrs.
Derbyshire, a relative of Mr. Purcell, has been visiting at his place, and was on her way home, Mr. Purcell accompanying her as far as Tweed. She was hurt about the hip. She also fell across the coach. Those not seriously injured were two Miss Beattys going to Tweed. A wrecking crew in a short time cleared the track.

traced to Brownville, N. Y., where he stayed a week. From there he was followed to Watertown, N. Y., and thence to New York city. It is claimed that it is only a matter of a few days till he will be apprehended.

The brothers of the late Miss Yorke have both left for their homes now.
Edward and his family left for How-

THIS TRAGIC LETTER— How would you answer it?

Between the lines of this short letter you can read grim tragedy. If its appeal were made to you, personally, how would you answer it? Suppose you held the power to receive this poor woman or to turn her away, which would you do?

"Will you kindly give me information concerning admission of a very needy woman near me. Her husband is dead, and she is in consumption. She has two small children, at present in an orphan's home, as the mother is not able to care for them, and their only income is what an aged mother earns. They live in one small room."

It is easy to say, "Why, of course, I would offer relief, if it were in my power!" But, think! Are you sincere when you say that? Are you in earnest? Do you really want to help poor, suffering Consumptives? Then here is your chance to prove your sincerity.

Contributions to the Muskoka Free Hospital for Consumptives will be gratefully acknowledged by W. J. Gage, Chairman Executive Committee, 84 Spadina Avenue, or R. Dunbar, Secretary - Treasurer, 347 King Street West, Toronto.

THE shutting off of imports from Continental Europe into Canada, due to the War, gives many home industries an unexampled opportunity for immense and immediate development

Canada will prosper at the expense of Continental Europe. This is not a time in Canada for repining on the part of the business man. We must be careful, even frugal, but we must also be bold.

DESERONTO ROAD.

This locality was visited with a nice rain, which began to fall quite early on Thursday evening 13th inst., and continued all night. The long-continued drought was keenly felt by the farmers—water becoming scarce and pasture all drying up. It will be a boon to late sowed buckwheat and late potatoes.

The threshing machine has made its appearance and completed a few jobs on its way up to Rathbun's and Winton's. It is expected back again next week to finish up everything but buckwheat. Grain is turning out fairly well and a good sample. Bob is a hustler!

Tomatoes have suffered greatly for want of rain and from present appearances will be about half a crop. The grasshoppers are destroying a large quantity of them.
